HITLER DECIDES TO REJECT ROOSEVELT PLEA FOR PEACE

OF HIGHWAY BOARD IN RIVERS' HANDS

Sources Close to Department Declare Governor Could Exert Pressure for His 'Little New Deal'

By The Associated Press. An obscure paragraph in an executive economy order affecting the highway department appeared likely last night to involve Georgia's road-building program in the squabble over financing Governor Rivers' "Little New Deal." It is a provision in the order suspending future lettings of highway contracts, wherein the Governor retains authority to approve individual road projects where it appears an emergency exists. Sources close to the state high way board contend this "saving clause" gives virtual one-man control of the highway department to the Governor, and would permit him, if he wished, to exert powerful political pressure on economy-minded legislators by withholding road projects until they pledged support of revenue legislation to finance his program. Parker Tells of Plea.

Hint that this might be in the Governor's mind came from Rep-resentative John C. Perker, of Colquitt, speaker pro tem of the house of representatives. Parker of Colquitt county taxpayers to the capitol Friday to plead for completion of the Moultrie-Adel

Governor Rivers yesterday struck 40 employes from the pay roll of the Department of Public Welfare and, with but few exceptions, ordered salary reductions for all employes retained. The Governor ordered pay cuts of 10 per cent for all employes drawing between $100 and $150 a month and 12 1-2 per cent for workers drawing more than $150 a month. The total savings were estimated at $190,000 per year. Simultaneously it was learned that Miss Louisa DeB. FitzSimmons, director of the public assistance, has resigned to join the Social Security Board in Washington. Miss FitzSimmons' salary was reduced last month from $375 to $250 per month, but it was said vesterday that the pay cut had nothing to do with her resignation.

Position Refused. Miss Frances Steele, director of the department's division of child welfare, was among those dismissed by Rivers' order. She had been drawing a salary of $250 per month. The post was tendered to Miss Catherine Sammons, consultant on training schools and juvenile delinquency, at $175 monthly. but it is understood that Miss sammons rejected the offer. Miss Lucile Watson, district field

Unexpected Return of Warships Also Would Serve To Checkmate

WASHINGTON, April 15 .- (A) An unexpected order to the fleet today to return at once to the Pacific coast-cutting short its Atlantic visit by five weeks-reinforced President Roosevelt's appeal for peace in Europe.

The navy did not explain the purpose of the order, but official circles decided quickly that it would have one, or possibly both, of the following two effects:

Without hinting at a definite Anglo-American understanding, naval quarters were convinced that, with the American fleet in the Pacific, Great Britain would feel free to keep more of her warships nearer home than would otherwise be the case.

Order Follows Appeal.

The order to the fleet was is-sued by Secretary Swanson a lit-trop mixed a casual tea in the more than an hour after the their conferences.

The main fleet's return will restore in the Pacific substantially the former 5-3 tonnage superiority over Japan. There will be about 158 American warships in that ocean, ranging from battleships to submarines.

Student Training Is All Very Well But Why Pass Us By?' They Ask; May Amplify Program.

By LUKE GREEN.

While 30 Georgia Tech students yesterday prepared to enter the second phase of the governmentaid air training program, rumblings of dissatisfaction came from several Atlanta private fliers who think the government should do something for pilots already trained.

Already the Georgia Tech fliers have nine weeks of flight training behind them, but no student is expected to be ready for graduation before the end of May. One student has flown 19 hours of the minimum of 35, but the average is about a light. about eight.
The private fliers contend that instead of taking a group of in-experienced youngsters and giving them initial training, the govern-ment first should have capitalized on the reserve of pilots now in existence by giving them advaced training and refresher courses. Have Money Invested.

Learning to fly has been an ex-pensive venture for them, the civilian fliers point out. Some of them have several thousands of dollars each invested in their training and equipment. In time of war they could be more valuable for defense purposes, they say. Why then has the government ignored them entirely? they ask

Professor William Weems, of the Tech School of Aeronautics, who is in charge of the local program, feels that in developing young college-trained men, the government is not expecting to produce a group of expert flyers chief advantage to the government, Weems declared, is that pilots are inexpensively trained for duties of both peace and war. It is now possible to weed out poorly-couldness material at much less equipped material at much less expense than is required in the basic training given in the army flying field, he explained.

Merely Preliminary. Of course, even when they have of course, even when they have finished the course, these young men will have only a very basic and preliminary training in army flying, or one roughly equivalent to what is called the "A" course in army flying circles, he said.

Atlanta has approximately 340 private fliers. A cross-section of them who were asked to give their opinions on the government program felt they were being discriminated against in favor of less experienced men. Some of their comments follow:

Charlie Ford, of the city hall:

"The college men are getting of the college men are getting of the college men are getting there are they will have to thermore, later they will have to the planes, for they are flying only small ships now."

When the civilians learn to fly because they like it and spend their own money to learn, it seems that something could be done for them. Advanced training for them, I think, would accomplish the desired results.

Favors Private Fliers. Harry Balance, film executive: "I don't have much to say about the government program, but I do think more should be done for the private fliers. It has now gotten to the point that the air lines are almost pushing the private fliers off the fields."

Weems said there is a possi-bility that some of the colleges in the government program will inaugurate advanced courses in the fall for students who do not register at the colleges for any other subjects and who are not required to present ordinary edu-cational qualifications for college entrance. He said he could not say definitely whether this would cats are taken each month. Of this number only about 150 are placed in homes. The others are mercifully destroyed because the society does not have funds to care for

The society strives to find h for 300 animals a month, or 50 per cent of the number taken in at the shelter, which is located at 981 Howell Mill road.

In order to continue its progressive program, the society needs new members, officers pointed out. Although the membership is increasing it still is not large enough to meet the needs of the organization, they explained.

The superintendent collects stray dogs and cats, cares for the ani-mals and puts ill and injured ones out of their misery. A veterinarian

Donations Asked.

The shelter can care for approximately 60 dogs at a time. Persons taking pets from the shelter are asked to make whatever donations they can, Mrs. Hopkins said.

As proof of the good treatment given the animals, the superinten-dent related the following story: About a year ago a Gainesville man was given a dog. The new owner took the dog home. But a few days later back came the dog to the humane society shelter. He had run or walked all the way

"We want Atlantans to come to the society and get pets," Mrs. Hopkins said. "We feel sure that when people know about what fine animals can be obtained here we will have no trouble in find-ing homes for all the pets we have."

Opposing Viewpoints at Labor Law Institute

Public bewilderment over federal laws, with their administration leaning toward the side of labor, was described yesterday by Pope Brock (left) to the Atlanta Institute of Law. With Brock is E. Smythe Gambrell, institute director.

The National Labor Relations Board is doing its best to administer the law humanely and fairly, argued J. Warren Madden, chairman, who described the workings of the board.

These criticisms were advanced after Madden, the first speaker on the program, had concluded his address, which outlined the meth-ods and policies of his board and defended its system in trying to assure fair hearings.

"Throughout the period of its existence," said Madden, "the board has handled a total of more than 18,000 cases. Of these, 14,-000 cases, or more than threequarters, have been closed, and of the cases closed more than 95 per 'ment. Thus only five per cent organizations. Such was not the intent of congress.

Cotton may become a secondary crop in the south.

Unless inroads being made on cotton markets by substitutes are curbed, King Cotton will be deposed as ruler of Dixie's millions, according to Hobson Vandiver, field service director of the Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association.

First, I will discuss the national labor relations act. It was proposed to labor, that is to the workers, their common law right to belong to labor unions. The courts had recognized this right, but some employers had effectively denied it to their workers by various means.

This proposed was almost universally opposed by the employers First, I will discuss the nation

The biggest trouble with the cotton industry, Vandiver said, is that the American people won't use the staple.

I do not approve of many things done by the National Labor Rela-tions Board. It is my opinion that Chairman Madden has done his best, under difficult circumstances, to properly administer the law. Mistakes have been made and they have cost dearly in the loss of public confidence in the board.

Ramspeck said "I are sorry to see Mr. Cheatham try to make a sectional issue of this labor legislation.")

The fair labor standards act, generally referred to as the wages and hours law, was also enacted in bitter controversy.

In the beginning we tried to set up an independent board with the American Cotton Manufacturers' Associated Press dispracturers' Association, who was quoted in Associated Press dispracturers' Association, who was quoted in Associated Press dispracturers' Association, who was quoted in Associated Press dispracturers' associated Pr which the matter was considered. Here again the legislation wa framed for those who gave it sup-port. The advice and counsel of the conservative element had no voice in the result. By the fury of the opposition congress was driven to accept the proposals of the more radical thinking groups offering support and some of their views, were incorporated in the law. The injection of the sectional issue by some of our friends in the south brought support from the north, but this support came with condi-tions more harsh in their effect on

The labor committee of the house is now attempting to ease some of these harsh conditions, but we cannot now go as far as we could have gone in 1937 if we had then had some support from the business interests of our section.

Again I do not question the sincerity or the right of those who opposed the law. They certainly acted within their rights, but I again raise the question whether they served themselves, their own interests or the general welfare. It was evident from the beginning that the bill would eventually pass in some form. In my opinion, it would have been a much better law if that self-evident fact had been accepted, and congress had had the tempering influence of some of those who opposed it to the bitter end. TIMES CHANGED

In my opinion we could have written a better statute if the conditions had been different. If more employers had been willing to support the objective of the act, their influence would have been reflected in the contents thereof.

GENERAL WELFARE
WAS NOT SERVED

Being without the benefit of support from the conservative employer, we were forced to write the law to reflect the ultra-liberal views of those who did support the objective. The result has not been pleasing to many of our people. I do not challenge their right to their position, nor do I question the sincerity of their opinion, but I do raise the question of whether or not they served the general welfare.

Is in my opinion we could have the fight and this tinally resulted in the mass and to remove some of the law. The section of the passage of a more drastic law the give that as long as we maintain a free government, a government by the people, we will again see the worker treated as a servant, as one at the mercy of an untar employer. AIR MAIL SERVICE

Transfers During Flight Would Speed Up Service Along Cross Country Routes in State.

Scores of small Georgia townsnow little more than scenery on routes of cross-country air linesare to get air mail service, if experiments in transferring mail to and from planes in flight are successful,

This was indicated yesterday in a bulletin received here by Postmaster Lon Livingston. It was pointed out the government plans still further experiments in picking up and delivering mail by ships in flight.

Livingston said that if the "gadget" with which the government is experimenting were put into operation here, it would affect towns along—but not stops on—the various air mail routes out of Atlanta.

He explained the Atlanta-Birmingham route could serve Doug-ingham route could serve Doug-lasville, Carrollton and Tallapoosa, while the Atlanta-Augusta route could serve Lithonia, Covington, Social Circle, Madison, Greens-boro, Crawfordville and Thomson. Similar service might be established at towns along routes from Atlanta to Jacksonville, Greenville, Montgomery, Chattanooga, and Tallahassee.

The experiments involve a method by which mail sacks, hung on ropes between two tall poles, be hooked to a cable attached to the moving plane, and drawn into the cabin.

Mail to be delivered would be dropped on the air field. Mail so collected would be taken to a central point for quick sorting and transfer to large passenger and mail planes on cross-country

PUBLIC MISTAKEN

Many Believe It Contagious or Incurable, But Majority Know Disease Can Be Beaten at Start. By DR. GEORGE GALLUP, Director, American Institute

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion. NEW YORK, April 15.—Medical men, research workers and public health authorities are training their biggest guns today on the solution of one of America's most serious afflictions—cancer. They know that the great majority of cancer cases can be cured if treatment is taken in time, and so the present drive against the disease is aimed first of all at the

What do these ordinary Americans know about cancer? How do they regard it? How far has

To answer some of these ques-tions which interest the public and tions which interest the public and medical men alike, the American Institute of Public Opinion has conducted a nation-wide survey among men and women in all walks of life. The publication of the survey during what has been set aside by President Roosevelt as "Cancer Month" gives ample evidence that as far as the public is concerned, cancer is the most is concerned, cancer is the most feared of American diseases.

The survey shows:

1. Cancer education has progressed to the stage where the majority of Americans know that it can be cured if treated in time.

2. Nevertheless, many Americans still think cancer is incurable.

cans still think cancer is incurable and many others have eroneous ideas about it. About one person in five thinks the disease is contagious or "catching," and an al-most equal number say they don't whether it is contagious or

3. In spite of the progress in public understanding of the dis-ease, cancer is dreaded far more than other leading causes of death, such as heart disease, pneumon

These findings, which add some thing to what cancer research now knows, indicate that much still re-knows, indicate that much still remains to be done in the field of educating the public.

Can Be Curad—IF.

Fortunately, the majority of Americans have already realized that cancer can be halted or cured, if discovered in time and treated by surgery, X-rays or radium. The Institute asked a cross-section of men and women in all parts of the country: "Do you think canthe country: "Do you think can-cer is curable?" Nearly two in every three said they thought it was, many of them offering the proviso, "if caught in time." People in Eastern United States, where the greatest efforts have been made so far toward cancer education, were more aware of this fact than some of the westerners and southerners, who often took a more pessimistic view.

Doctors have discovered that many people have erroneous ideas about cancer, and today's survey shows that some of these theories are widespread. Commonest of all misinformations is the idea that cancer is "catching."

The Institute asked: Do you think cancer is contagious (or 'catching')?" Although cancer education tried to remove this un-

U. S. SUBSIDY PLAN

Southern Manufacturers Oppose Loan Staple Program as Fatal to Industry in This Section.

NEW ORLEANS, April 15 .- (AP) The administration's plan to subsidize exports of cotton was opposed today by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association which said such an arrangement would be practically "the death knell of the already tottering textile industry."

The association, in resolutions passed at the final session of the three-day convention here, called the government loan policy disas-trous to the farmer and urged that the cotton crop be allowed to move into the free channels of trade. Free Flow Asked.

"Exportation of cotton on a subsidy basis," a resolution said, "will aggravate an existing deplorable and precarious cotton policy and will that much further hamchannels of trade, the necessity for which free flow has been plainly demonstrated during the past few

(Most cotton trade sources be-lieve adoption of Senator Bilbo's bill would result in a huge increase in the use of cotton wrapping for bales. Under the present gross weight law farmers are paid for the weight of the bagging and ties—jute and steel—which adds to the price. The net weight bill provides that the seller receive payment only for the cotton, with bagging and ties excluded.) Other resolutions passed:

"Moonlight Sonata."

Music lovers who missed seeing the motion picture, "Moonlight Sonata," in which Paderewski is the star, when it was presented here in two performances by the Georgia Federation of Music Clubs will welcome the announce-ment that it comes for a return engagement at the Emory Oxford road at North Decatur road, for a three-day showing Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

I saw the film at its previous presentation, and I personally rec-ommend it very highly. It was worth far more than the price of admission just to see the close-up views of the master's hands and his facial expressions as he played. And almost as intriguing as the music of the film was the conversation of the great artist. To hear Paderewski talk was realy an event, for never before had there been an opportunity for his public to hear him talk! Selections that Pederewski plays in the picture are the first move-ment of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," Chopin's "Polonaise in A flat major," Liszt's "Second Hun-garian Rhapsody," and his own famous "Minuet in G major." Mrs. Dowman Plays in LaGrange. Mrs. Charles Dowman, widely

They heard of the pianist who created a sensation the previous year by "shaking his then golden mane and pounding out staccato in a manner that playing with a fire and brilliancy that excited Americans." They persuaded him to come to Palo Alto for a guarantee of not more than $800 (about one-fifth of the fee he usually demanded in later years). Hoover Error.

carelessly scheduled a date they found later fell during spring va-cation, when all students and teachers were away.

When Paderewski arrived for the concert, the boys sought .. private interview, and nervously admitted their predicament—they had sold only $250 in tickets, but offered their own personal notes if Paderewski would go ahead and play, and let them make up the deficit later. The pianist, gruffly spoken, but generous, questioned them closely, found that their expenses were about $100, and smiled and told them he would be satisfied with the rest.

Years later, when Hoover was a world-touring mining engineer, before he was a public figure, he again met Paderewski. He identified himself as "one of the boys who got in financial trouble."
"My, but you have grown," Paderewski exclaimed.

THE LAST GESTURE

It is apparent that President Roosevelt considers the European situation has reached a point at which an explosion is inevitable within days, and that the message he dispatched to Reichfuehrer Hitler and to Premier Mussolini yesterday was conceived as the ultimate gesture a peace-loving people could make in a world gone mad.

The message, and the grounds upon which it would be framed and dispatched, was predicted in yesterday morning's Constitution by Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner in their column, The Capital Parade. The authors revealed that both the White House and the State Department have been casting about for some method of doing something to halt the march toward chaos. Two such plans have been proposed. The first was the one taken by the President as the strongest gesture possible in the light of American public opinion. The second would have been construed as more or less direct intervention, requiring either condemnation of the totalitarian states or a message expressing strong support of the democracies.

As constituted, the message which the President dispatched to the dictators is simple and direct, asking an equally simple and direct answer. It does not involve the American people in the quarrels of Europe, in effect offering the good services of the United States government as an intermediary between nations now too deeply lost in a test of power to be able to re-establish direct contacts which would make a lasting peace possible.

If, as it would appear, the message of the President is the last gesture to save half the world from bloody shambles, it must also be the last intervention of the United States if it fails. If it is unsuccessful and the information of Mr. Alsop and Mr. Kintner is correct, then America has nothing to gain and everything to lose by taking stronger steps to prevent the dictators from the test of strength on which they so evi-

It will be time, then, to turn the entire attention of every American toward the inevitably stupendous task of keeping the United States from involvement in another European war. Whatever the sympathies of the people, whatever the incitement to a repetition of 1917, America must stand aloof. The alternative will spill the blood of hundreds of thousands of American youth on the alien soil of Europe; will rip apart the economic structure and the wealth amassed on this continent in the more than 150 years of the Republic of the United States; will blast the last vestiges of individual liberties from the maps of the world; will enslave Americans forever more in the world game of power politics, and will build a cost that the grandchildren of today and their grandchildren can never pay. It will mean bereaved mothers, sacrificed to the altar of sorrow by the war gods; wrecked homes and shattered health for wives and children; tattered lives for those who go overseas and are fortunate—or unfortunate -enough to return.

Were war to mean but one of these things. it would be enough. But it means all, and more. War solves nothing, builds nothing, is nothing but destruction of all that is fine, all that the world has striven to build, all that science has been for mankind.

America has made her last gesture. If it fails, as it well may, then the time has come for America to keep silent, to stand by, sorrowfully perhaps, but with determination. When we understand that war will mean the end of all these things that Americans have built, that determination will be unswerving.

Slogans can be fine things, and intriguing. The slogan of the last war led the United States to "save the world for democracy." It came so near wrecking democracy that the battle to save it in the United States alone is still in the hands of the fates. Americans have no stake in Europe other than the hope of all men of good will that peace shall reign. If America has done everything possible to maintain that peace, then it is time for all Americans, of high or low degree, to keep the silence, and in that slience, the peace.

COTTON-ECONOMIC PUZZLE

Unfortunately, when the politicians under-took to lift cotton out of its maze of economic difficulties a few years ago, they made the fatal mistake of regarding it as a strictly southern farm question. It was looked upon, superficially, for purposes of quick governmental aid to the farmer, as "our's and our children's forever'-to use the phrase of a bygone age.

That was a blunder. Cotton was no domestic farm problem. It was a world problem. It continues and will continue to be a world problem. It must be solved, if it is to be solved at all, as a world problem. There now seems to be no disagreement on this point. Mistakes have been admitted. Lessons have been learned. This should be helpful. A problem always seems to grow less difficult when it is definitely known and agreed upon.

Nothing of value, however, is to be accomplished—no matter how strong the urge among administration critics—by repetitiously shouting "I told you so" with reference to the policy of domestic price fixing. The cotton business, from the furrow to the retail counter, is staggering under this influence. Nor should the mistakes of the past six years longer be mitigated and condoned by that too-oft-repeated political "look what we had in 1932!"

The problem is here now. It is definitely known. So a solution must be found-a solution completely divorced from political considerations.

Taking cotton out of southern politics, however, even temporarily, is an almost insurmountable problem in itself. "Do something for the cotton farmer" has too long been a catch-phrase, for garnering votes, to be abandoned off-hand. The candidate who refuses to make the promise is licked before he starts. Yet, it is this very "doing something" policy which has been responsible, in large measure, for the cotton farmer's present predicament.

Delegates to the American Cotton Manufacturers Association have just adjourned their annual meeting at New Orleans. The cotton puzzle-the huge surplus, price fixing-was the main theme. It was urged that domestic pricefixing be abandoned, that American cotton be allowed to seek its natural level in relation to the world market, that the surplus, if this were done, would gradually be absolved in normal

If the surplus eventually would be absorbed in a normal competitive world market, then abandoning price-fixing would seem to be the first step toward a solution of the difficulties. But pulling the price peg would result in an immediate decline in price. No man can accurately predict to what extent it would fall. Therefore the "do something" boys would never agree to it because it would adversely effect the farmer whose vote he depends upon to hold office. Thus the discussion comes right back to the point whence it started.

Unless something is done effectively, however, and done promptly, to hold the surplus down or reduce it by increased consumption, the domestic cotton market, of its own weight, will gradually descend to the present world level, despite artificial support. Past experience should not be disregarded. With a much smaller surplus it was pegged at 12 cents, then, as the surplus increased, it was lowered to 10 cents, then to eight cents per pound. On the surface it would appear as if this decline was "permitted." It is doubtful if it could have been prevented. The strain on the present peg gets heavier and heavier. Shall it be allowed to break from the strain or should it be removed?

A WORTHY APPOINTMENT

seems to confound the business policy of the administration, actions such as the appointment of Edward J. Noble to the Commerce Department lend emphasis to the fact that the administration is shifting toward concentration upon alleviation of burdens on business, even though reluctantly.

The appointment of the Connecticut Republican to a post as the right-hand man of Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins is one of a series in which good government and sane regulation of business have gone hand in hand, and the combined weight of these appointments may be expected to counterbalance the importunities of the left-wing New Dealers in the councils of the executive branch of govern-

Moreover, these new appointees, numbering among their ranks John Hanes of the Treasury, Attorney General Murphy and others less prominent, but no less worthy, provide a common meeting ground for the congressmen and businessmen of like mind with the White House, a desirable condition which has not been much in evidence during the late unpleasantness. Some may wonder at the inclusion of Attorney General Murphy in this group, but a look at the manner in which he has been clearing the judiciary of particularly foul specimens gives ample reason. He is an administrator of rare capability and administrators are notoriously prone to regard the realistic side of any question. This latest appointment is evidently nonpartisan in concept, and brings to the head of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce a man well versed in the operation of government agencies as well as in the field of business. When and if congress approves the creation of the post of undersecretary of commerce, he will outrank the other personnel with the sole exception of Hopkins. His record as chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority has been marked by efficient handling of a situation marked with considerable bitterness and wrangling before its establishment, and his transfer to the Commerce Department should give substance to Secretary Hopkins' efforts to speed the upward trend of business indices.

THE NEW COTTON ECONOMY At North Carolina State University a new experiment goes forward with cotton. Three or four weeks before the bolls are ready to open the cotton is cut, stalks and all, and from the celulose is made rayon and paper.

The experiments are successful with one temporary exception, as oil from the seeds causes extra work to remove it. Experients are being made to produce a cotton with few, if any, seed. Meanwhile, at the University of Tennessee and in other re-search departments, work is going forward developing a cotton with more seeds than usually contained in cotton. They have de-veloped new uses for cottonseed oil.

These two diverse experiments informally were discussed last week at New Orleans where the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association met in annual convention. They are among the more hopeful developments in the industry. These new uses of cotton and the probability of increased industrial outlets for cotton, vitally are needed to restore King Cotton to his throne.

It may seem ironic that cotton should be grown to be manufacturered into rayon, the chief competitor of cotton, yet that may be one of the chief "outs" for cotton.

It believes, and is angry about it, that the cotton industry has been selected as a sort of guinea pig for government experiments in regulating business.

They are angry because the board set up to make reports to the Wages and Hours Commission largely was composed of representatives of northern mills. There was no objection to the wages and hours standard already in effect but there was substantial objection to the proposed increase recommended by northern mill owners.

You heard in the report of Secretary W. M. McLaurine, the fol-

"Geographic location, history, environment, tradition and notably the preponderance of the Anglo-Saxon element among those con-stituting the south's industrial workers, have forever decreed that southern ideals, management and industrial philosophy shall differ somewhat from those of other sections; for these and many other obvious reasons, a southern clearing house for problems affecting our southern industry, is indispensable.

our southern industry, is indispensable.

"While this is a nation unified politically, it is not a nation of economic and social homogeneity. This fact was recognized when certain legislation was passed with extra-judicial administrative features: the Agricultural Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the rules and regulations of the ICC and others."

That was the feeling. They wish Mr. Roosevelt would quit talking about war. They ink he talks too much about war and thereby injures business.

The complete attitude was best summed up, perhaps, by a statement in a general conversation:

"If this section isn't the Number 1 economic problem, it sure as hell will be when the government is done with it."

THAT THIRD-TERM BOGEY More than anything else, I think, these businessmen in cotton, wish Mr. Roosevelt would announce his decision as to a third

They believe that if Mr. Roosevelt would announce his decision They believe that if Mr. Roosevelt would announce his decision not to run, business would improve by leaps and bounds and continue improving. They do not believe Mr. Roosevelt would win if nominated, although they concede he might if he avoids a party split. But they do believe the political fight and his re-election would mean disaster for American business; would mean more and more federal bureaus to handle the affairs of business; that cotton especially would be taken over by the government.

They believe that a Republican victory will come in 1940 if that party can find a suitable candidate. They base that belief on the belief the nation is weary of the methods of the present administration. They believe the people generally disapprove of the manner in which relief has been handled; that the farmers generally are dissatisfied with the Agricultural Act; that government waste has been satisfied with the Agricultural Act; that government waste has been a public scandal and that business wants a New Deal along with all these other elements.

Out of this convention which closed yesterday is sure to come some developments by the industry itself. They will tell you one of the causes of their present condition is the fact they all are so intensely individualistic they have never "got together" in their own behalf. Lack of co-operation by those engaged in the industry.

It was a plain-talking convention which did not spare the whips.

It talked cold turkey, hung out its own linen and did not meet merely to tell jokes about Mr. Roosevelt as do so many associations of businessmen. Not that they did not tell a few, but they met to talk business; to propose methods and did so. I enjoyed that convention as well as speaking before the national convention of College Publicity Men and Women.

life. The preparation must fit for his life's work. Certainly portance, but I did try to lead the way from what the boy was going to "do," to a consideration of what he was People are so apt to take that for granted. "Of course we want him to be a good man." Here is a lefinite weakness in character building—there is no definite idea of what we mean by "a good man," and so no well-defined plan for ealizing the ideal.

I am very fond of dogs, and find it fascinating to play with them and watch them. There are good dogs and bad dogs. But dogs are the result of heredity, and of their masters. A dog cannot choose what sort of dog he will be, because he cannot nicture to be, because he cannot picture to himself a kind of dog which he would like to be. Now a man is the only kind of animal which can picture to himself the kind of per-son he would like to be. In other words he can choose an ideal man—his definition of the man he wants to be—and holding that before his vision, work toward its realization. And we ought to understand that without such an ideal, and determination to reach that ideal, a good character cannot be builded.

Good and Bad.
Those whom we call bad men in the world, are not those who have determined to be bad. I usly doubt if any man ever did determine beforehand to be bad. A bad man is a failure. He is one who failed to choose to be a good man. Bad people are the victims of their surroundings, the creatures of circumstances. They form their habits, opinions and ambitions from the people with whom they come in contact. Following the course of least resistance, they act largely upon the instincts, impulses, and appetites of the moment. They are not neccesarily degraded, or vicious people. They may be innocent of all the acts which are usually called sins. They have simply failed to vitally influence the world for good. They have failed to serve mankind by making some contribution of worth to society. ontribution of worth to society
This is not the usual view

"Goodness" is too often the negative—what one does not do—in I am insisting that the determina-tion to be good, must be more than a determination not to be bad. How much of the moral training is expressed in the admonition: "now don't be bad." So much of the preaching is in terms of "don't." There is a profound truth in the old proverb: "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." have guessed that the first faint Yes, not only the hands, but the Nazi activities outside Germany are consolidated under the official direction of the foreign division of the National Socialist party. The slogan is Hitler's original slogan, "The common good before private gain." Its salute is the Nazi-Fascist salute. The Bund officially says:

"The common salute to ban-ners and flags is the outstretchners and riags is the outstretch-ed arm. The common acclaim and the most universal sign of devotion to those whom we want to honor is the outstretch-ed hand. It is the universal sa-lute of Arvans the world over." lute of Aryans the world over."
Not yet it isn't! But it is the purpose of the Nazi-Fascist revo-lution to make it so.

It is perhaps too much to say that the Nazis expect to capture the government of the United States. But they do intend to form an enormous pressure group, a highly organized minority, under completely authoritarian leader-ship, which will influence elections in the United States and the decisions of congress, particularly on foreign affairs.

It recruits this pressure group by organization, propaganda and a systematic use of the boycott against all persons in public life whom it wishes to get rid of. It goes so far as to set up fake cor-porations and send out letters in their names, threatening boycotts against publications and radio chains and private sponsors which publish a few of the facts about the world in which we live.

The "Ordnungs Dienst" of the German-American Bund is an exact replica of the Nazi Storm troopers, and is formed for precisely the same purpose—namely, for the dissemination of terror. They drill in camps, and they pledge blind allegiance to their leader.

There are bund organizations all These consist in giving assistance

They say, for instance, that the American press is in the hands of the Jews. Exactly the opposite is the truth. Apart from the New York Times and the New York Evening Post, there are no great newspapers of Jewish ownership in New York, and on the ty of the staff is not Jewish. No of the great news services and none of the great newspaper chains—the Scripps-Howard, the Ganis Jewish.

Leaving out of account the fact that the Constitution of the United States guarantees equality for all citizens, regardless of their racial origins, and that the mere raising of the question is irrelevant, the facts which are broadcast in thousands of pamphlets throughou United States on this and kir matters have no relation truth. The propaganda is done for the purpose of stirring up and di-viding this country, and for that purpose alone. The attitude of the Third Reich toward Germans in this country is the exact opposite of the attitude of the German republic and of the German monarchy, which pre-ceded it. The old German-Ameri-can Buerger Bund, which was dis-solved during the World War, was active in promoting the American-ization of German immigrants to this country.

English and to assimilate the culgrounds to American life. The German-American Bund encourages the use of the German lan-guage. German is spoken in its camps, and its object is to assimi-late American life to Naziism.

Given an enormous growth of Nazi-Fascist power elsewhere in the world, these people and their fellow travelers will be a menace in the United States. They are a menace already. First of a menace aiready. First of all, they are a menace to loyal German-Americans. The perfectly well-grounded suspicion of them leads to a distrust of all people of German blood, although the overwhelming mass of German-Americans believe in American democracy, Christian civilization and human rights, and detest the Nazis human rights, and detest the Nazis as much as any of the rest of us do. Dictator Described as Well, But Constantly Worried About Health.

An intimate picture of Hitler's physical condition, with a psychological study of the German dictator's character, is presented here, on the occasion of his 50th birth-day, by a noted Austrian journalist who was a member of Chancellor Schuschnigg's 'inner cabinet' before the Reich's annexation of Austria. Among his occasiont of Austria. Among his acquaint-ances are many Germans, both pro and anti-Nazi, who have been associated with Hitler for many Adolf Hitler will be 50 years old on April 20. That is a private celebration—a private celebration in the life of every mother trembling for a son, in the life of every girl with a sweetheart to lose. If the peace of old age descends at last upon the man who is keeping the world in feverish tension, the peace of the world is assured.

The physical and mental condi-

The physical and mental condition of a man of 50 is the focal point in world affairs. The re-mote control exercised by Hitler is unexampled. True, Cleopatra's functional disturbances and Napoleon's accesses of fury made history in their time. Beyond doubt our generation would not have fallen into its present desperate gloom if Gustav Stresemann, the German peace hero, had had Briand, his French adversary, had Fuehrer, have the nerve-ends of a single man embraced all five continents. The waves that Hitler broadcasts startle the African continents. The waves that Hitler broadcasts startle the African bush and rouse Australia from its remote, isolated calm. This is not merely because our planet has grown so much smaller, with radio and plane making all God's which recur with alarming frequency. Recently, when the necessity for spectacles could no longer be postponed, a world-famous optical works was instructed to try our new lenses to suit the particular.

In medical eyes, the most famous man of our epoch will alpatterned exactly according to his ways be a classic example of un-balance, no matter whether he bathed in the favorite color, On his 50th birthday the Fuehrer has by no means overcome the restlessness of earlier years. Amid all this magnificence Hitler boasts that he never has a cent in his pocket. He has never owned a checkbook. In his youth he got along by tightening his belt. At the prime of his physical life, in his years of battle and agitating, he once summed up his supreme want anything wrong. All I want is for the party to be secure, so that I can have my living as head of the Voelkischer Beobachter."

But vastly as the newspapers the film company and a dozen other branches of the authoritarian racket pile up the millions, even at his present respectable age Hitler has achieved no normal balanced relation to things. Probably the self-styled savior—at 40 he still called himself simply a prophet—does not even want any relation to material things, and certainly there are where in the Fuehrer's make-up. Well, the Fuehrer's rather scattered hobbies are so firmly rooted in him that he can still give brilliant performances in his favorite fields. He is fond of surprising callers with his ability to rattle off the names of every unit in the British and American navies. And he knows the cast of every German movie comedy by heart. Some-times he will have three films run off one after another in his private theater. He is a good audience, and laughs at every joke. Helly, daughter of Hoffman, is supposed not to have smiled back. She preferred to marry the world-famous Professor Sauerbruch, Germany's leading surgeon. Dr. Sauerbruch is no longer invited to consultations at the Fuehrer's, although he used to be called hastily for every one of the frequent inflammations of the vocal chords. When a patient gets to be 50, it is better for him to be careful; even family relations play a part in the selection of the doctor.

Hitler's great worry is not whether there will be a world war of unthinkable horror, but whether the vocal chords will hold out, whether there will be any new abscesses of the larynx, whether the respirational difficulties can be eliminated, whether the eyes will give way, and, above all, be eliminated, whether the eyes policy. No more resourceful perwill give way, and, above all, whether some new invention will relieve the fearful sleeplessness. Day and night the bright lights of German chemistry pursue a new sleeping portion.

Not even the four years of the war meant a real recuperation for him—even though he never stayed long in the trenches, though stayed long in the trenches, though ritated the Indians who, under a treaty with the United States, had exclusive rights in the lands. But rades and superiors did not remember his war service publicly until he was head of the German Reich; but he did succumb to an injury; he was gassed.

Officially the Fuehrer's respiratory troubles and his sleeplessness are attributed to the old gassing. The fact that they grow worse as years go on and the acute illness into the past, on the other hand, leads to the conclusion that the causes are largely hysterical n nature. On solemn occasions than ever. In private conversation he makes a point of keeping to a whisper. His eyes are no worse than they should be after five decades of constant use. The abscesses on the larynx are not cancer, as was long feared in Gerassurance that they are entirely gone. But they do insist on rest, rest. This rest Hitler finds in his Bavarian mountains. The diplomats and journalists who see him only n Berlin have never really seen him at all. In Berlin he feels constantly oppressed, and premoni-tions of death continually pursue him. "I don't want to die among stones," he once cried out on arriving at the Anhalt station.

Here he is closest to the immortals.

Here, sunk in meditation hours at a time, he makes his deisions. Here the mysterious springs of his strength open. The nexampled acuteress with which this man, an ignoramus in all practical matters, feels where he can break through cavities with a single blow, and where it is right to dodge adroitly, has been increased and refined since he has entered the autumn of his life. The almost animal sense of smell with which he approaches people, scents out their weaknesses and opens up their talents, finds un-hampered play amid the beauties of nature. Probably the eternal mountains tell him it is useless to attack the British Isles. . . It only seems as if the empire were go-

If Hitler were not such a bad, impatient and physically sensitive patient, even the doctors would not take his illnesses very seriously. Soon thereafter he set out with a detective for a remote village in Ohio where, according to rumor, old man Kearns' ghost had been seen walking around the street. They must be careful. Ghosts scare so easily. They certainly didn't want to drive this one away. Anyway they had found out that Kearns, in the flesh, was not averse to taking a nip of gin now and then, especially when under pressure. They calculated the habit had followed him into the great beyond. They knew he was under pressure. So they took up a strategic position across the street from the village saloon.

About midnight, when they were tired and on the verge of calling it a day, the ghost they were looking for staggered out of the barroom into the street. They trailed it to a rooming house four blocks away and were not in the least surprised to find it was no ghost at all, but pa, in the flesh. In Appreciation

On this, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Atlanta Agency of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, we wish to thank the people of Atlanta and vicinity for the confidence they have shown in our organization and the institution we represent.

During the past twenty-five years this agency has grown from a small unit into a large modern service organization. The Company's insurance in force in Georgia now exceeds $33,000,000.00. Similarly, the Massachusetts Mutual's investments in the state have risen from a small amount in 1914 to nearly $11,000,000.00 in 1939.

In the years to come it will be our constant endeavor to continue to merit the confidence and good will that has been so graciously given us during the past quarter century.

AYERS CITES NEED FOR NEW FINANCING

Economist Declares That Corporations Should Greatly Increase Production.

CLEVELAND, April 15.—(P)—Economist Leonard Porter Ayres declared Saturday "each month that passes without the initiation of a vigorous increase in new corporate financing decreases the probability that this recovery will become self-sustaining."

In his monthly business review, the Cleveland Trust Company vice president said corporation executives already "are discussing the possible desirability of postponing new financing until next year when international tensions abroad may be less menacing, and political prospects at home will have become easier to interpret."

"Our greatest need now," Colonel Ayres said, "is more production, and especially more of the sort of production that goes into new plants, more modern equipment, expansions, additions, improvements and betterments.

"Such undertakings are financed by the sale of corporate securities, and such sales are made

Lens and Shutter-Camera News

We are grateful to Camera

Magazine for devoting a whole page in their April issue to our adventure in the amateur salon. The editors wonder how the salon judges are going to draw the line between the categories of profes-sional and amateurs, mentioning a number of hypothetical situations. This is indeed a moot question, with intricacies enough to afford with intricacies enough to afford permanent employment to a su-preme court. I believe (in the ab-sence of any official advice) that the judges will abide by the spirit of the rules, and spend most of their judicial energy on selecting superior pictures rather than on deciding who is, and who is not, an amateur.

A talk that is sure to be informative and entertaining is Bill Bradley's lecture on natural color photography at the High Museum of Art this afternoon at 3:30.

J. W. Rich, of Marietta, has finally, after three years of effort, got together the nucleus of a camera club in his city. Their first meeting will be held at the Marietta city auditorium Monday night. Good luck to them.

with the new shatterproof variety.

Now, with something of the idea of the seriousness of the occasion, you will want to know what the judges look for in the pictures. First, they insist on the picture fitting into the general theme of the exhibition. Thus, in this exhibit all of the prints had to give a prominent place to the subject or theme of smoke. Next, they look over all the pictures quickly, eliminating a few of outstanding Inferiority. Then they examine all of them again, breadly, specifically, closely, minutely, esthetically and technically. In short, in every way conceivable.

They look for suggestiveness, story-telling, symbolism, or those things which I like to think are summed up in the word "connotation," for good composition, design like time the word interest.

Exhibitions and competitions are in full swing now, and truthfully, to win a place in any of them today is a real achievement. Judges are becoming more and more critical, and prints show better and better quality.

President Trammell Scott Friday spoke to the managers of the Southern league and they, in turn, returned the greeting on a four-town telephone hookup.

Today, Joe (Barnum) Engel, president of the Lookouts, will don the earphones prior to the start of the game and hold a three-country conversation of international interest.

Engel will speak to the dictators of Europe. After he has finished the dictators will be free to give their views. Engel has in mind educating Hitler and Mussolini in baseball via a trans-Atlantic lesson.

It is understood that Monsieur Engel will invite them to attend Tuesday's opener at Chattanooga, with all expenses paid. "After either tosses out the first ball, I'll guarantee to toss him out."

"Is this on the level?" a questioner asked Elephant Joe.
The Barnum of baseball looked a trifle hurt momentarily and replied, "cross my heart." The Engel-Dictator interview will be picked up by the public address system. (Note: The department of public street cleaning also will be available if needed).

MANDEL OFFERS SERVICES.

Lou Mandel, the perennial rookie who knows every player in baseball, dropped in at Ponce de Leon park yesterday and offered his services to the Crackers. He promised to win 20 games for Atlanta, but Manager Richards explained the roster mandel annually visits all big league camps and seeks tryouts. He has been doing it for years and years. He sticks around awhile and then moves on. Right now he is working back to his home in Chicago.

The Chicagoan, who is fat and, as he says, under thirty, has an unlimited flow of conversation. Whether he can play a lick or not he really talks a good game.

lick or not, he really talks a good game.

FANS LIKE THE RUBE.

Atlanta baseball fans already have picked a favorite in Al Rubeling, who has taken over the spot occupied for three years by Johnny Hill, of Douglasville.

It was a tough spot for the Rube, in the first place. He doesn't have the arm Hill has and there was some question, in the minds of fans, as to whether he would hit.

There hasn't been nearly enough baseball played yet for impressed the fans with his ability to field. Many already are convinced that his defensive ability excells that of Hill.

But, of course, it's still early to form definite opinions. The fact remains, however, that Rube is getting off the spot rapidly.

Any player who hustles as the Rube does is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, anyway.

PETERS HAS HIS TROUBLES.

For some time Russ Peters has been having a bit of difwith an accurate arm. Peters has been overthrowing the mark.

He tossed one away opening day.

Peters, starting at short in place of Buster Chatham, who held down the position for seven years in a row, has been put on something of a spot, too, by certain of the fan clientele.

But fandom generally is prone to accept successors and the Georgians got nine first places

It is now possible to get five to one on El Chico, the wonder horse that has been held at the very close odds of 4 to 1 heretofore.

Technician, winner of the Flamingo stake at Hialeah, has been backed down to 6 to 1 in Carroll's book, while the Clown is now held at 10 to 1 and Johnstown, due to heavy New York play, is now down from 10 to 8 to1.

There is a lot of Technician talk now. Herbert Woolf, of Kansas City, had a winner last year in Lawrin, winner of the 1938 Flamingo. Lawrin was the biggest hoss in the smallest Derby field.

Technician is from the same stable and has shown the same many quarters to give this latest Woolf eligible utmost consideration. You see, Lawrin slipped in as a winner last year with comparatively little backing.

IT HAPPENED JUST LIKE THAT.

He was sitting quietly at home, this fellow was, minding his own business when he heard the "queen" on the radio program begin talking in an excited voice.
"You villain, what are you doing here? How did you cross the moat?

By JACK TROY.

The Crackers are improving, year by year.

In the second game of the 1938 season, Knoxville unlimbered the heavy artillery and blasted the Crackers, 16 to 6. And yesterday, Chattanooga, another Tennessee entry, rolled the gatling guns into position and the ultimate toll, in eight innings, was 12 to 6 in favor

As may be seen, the Crackers got their six runs but the Lookouts fell four shy of matching the Smokie total. So there is much to be thankful for.

In fact, a vote of thanks is due Umpire Shovel Hodge for calling the contest at the end of the eighth on account of lack of daylight. Two hours were required to play

action on the mound and one was pressed into service as a pinch-hitter.

Starting with Alex Hooks' homer with one on in the first, Chattanooga kept after the Cracker moundsmen every inning through the fifth. By this time they had 12 runs. Clyde Smoll, Bob Chipman and Harry John-ston were the chief Cracker mound

The Crackers had one big inning. With two away in the tourth they went after Red Lucas, of Goat Hill, Tenn., and the former major league star aided his own downfall by suddenly losing his control. He had been well-nigh invincible up to the fourth. Anyway, the Crackers scored five runs in the fourth off Lucas and Bob Smith, who relieved, and then lapsed into a virtual calm.

Mack Stewart finished for the Crackers and did a "good job of pitching. Dick Bass relieved Smith and Dick Lanahan took over in the eighth when Bass had trouble finding the plate.

Cincy Reds Invade Pittsburgh; Tuesday Will See All Big League Clubs in Action.

NEW YORK, April 15.—(A)—A major league year clouded with "lfs," threatened with continued Yankee dominance, and promising dramatics touches in keeping with baseball's centennial starts Monday with one game scheduled in each circuit.

Cincinnati is host to Pittsburgh in the National league curtain raiser, while President Roosevelt will provide the traditional touch to the American loop opener by tossing in the ball for the Senator-Yankee game at Washington.

The other clubs will start play Tuesday. Last year's attendance for the two opening games totaled 39,700, with the two-day opening attendance touching 175,000. Barring contrary weather this mark should be at least equaled this year.

Seldom has a season approached with so many little dramas woven into the two major plays; with so many puzzling questions to be anwith joy or heartbreak in broiling midsummer seat.

Will the remade arms of the Hubbels and the Schumachers and the Allens, and the ailing wings of the Deans and the Grissoms, stand the pace or droop like a wilting lily? Will the sturdy iron horse, Lou Gehrig, survive the wear and tear to add another season to his amazing string of con-secutive games? Will the Freddy Hutchinsons and the Ted Wil-liamses and other touted rookies blossom or fade?

These questions and a host of others only time can answer, as well as the question of whether the Yankees can make history by winning a fourth consecutive pennant.

That the Yankees rate as outstanding favorites cannot be de-nied, nor is the fact that the National League race has every indication of being another free-forall, with at least four teams, perhaps more, given better than an outside chance of crashing through.

As the veterans try to carry through and the rookies try to break through, the managerial pic-ture is dotted with new faces. Two pilots, Del Baker, of Detroit, and Gabby Hartnett, of the Chicago Gabby Hartnett, of the Chicago Cubs, are starting their first full season, they hope, and Leo Du-rocher, of Brooklyn; Ray Blades, of the St. Louis Cardinals; Doc Prothro, of the Phillies, and Fred Haney, of the St. Louis Browns, are making their debuts.

All teams claim added strength, either through acquisition of new men or return to form of 1938 cripples. In a nutshell, the clubs stack up like this:

Classy rookie shortstop in Eddie Miller. Defense stressed.

as roosie. A scraping outin, but not rated real contender. Philadelphia. Doc Prothro, Manager—Still the Phillies.

With the exception of the Yankees, who appear to have everything, the problem on most clubs simmers down to the pitching, and the pitching simmers down to the ability of star hurlers of others years to come back after an unprecedented epidemic of arm ailments and operations. If some of them can't, the 1939 season will see the fading from the scene of moundsmen whose wings have made baseball history the past decade and more.

made baseball nistory and past decisional more.

But for every fading star a new star thines, and the campaign opening Monday promises a brilliant cluster made up of the Riches and the Hutchinsons and the Salvos and others yet unsung.

And, lest it be overlooked in the maze of intriguing details, there is the little matter of Babe Ruth's home run record. Hank Greenberg came within two of equaling it last year with 58, and he has lost none of his power.

rather than opposing batsmen when they say, "Red set seven down in a row."

War correspondents with the War correspondents with the Dodgers on their recent march through Georgia adopted the same kidding attitude toward Evans as the boxing writers did toward Galento when the fat fisticuffer goofed and guzzled his way to puglistic prominence. They are singing of screwballs and throwbacks, and it is quite apparent from the vein of their roundelays that they are referring to the 31-year-old rookie flinger, rather than to his deliveries.

Russell the Red has three things in common with Two-Ton Tony:

(1) He says drinking beer makes him a better athlete; (2) He is of rather ripe age for one breaking into big time sports, and (3) He is a toss-back to the swash-buckling, rough-and-ready performers of the old Baltimore Orioles.

Moreover the Dodgers "table"

of a liability than an asset.

The Glants bought Evans from New Orleans last summer for $10,000 cash and Pitcher Glen Gabler. At the close of the Southern association season, Red had won 21 and lost 14 and was voted the most valuable player in the association. Despite this, Bill Terry of the Glants assigned Evans to the Jersey City Glants because his serve list of 40 was filled. Immediately, Larry MacPhail of the Dodgers drafted Evans for $7,500, much to Sweet Willyum Terry's dismay and discomfiture. Because of this "steal" and the increasing bitterness between the Giants and Dodgers, Pitcher Evans should prove an ideal instrument for Messrs. MacPhail and Du-rocher to use in baiting the Terry-men. It is rumored that the svengalis of Flatbush will use Evans as starting pitcher on opening day when the Giants invade Ebbetts Field. Red is all for such an unveiling. He's that kind of feller—cocky, gabby and a great bench jockey. Incidentally, there is one more

The New York boxing commission ordered Tony to quaff milk instead of suds while training, and only last week the Dodgers cut Evans' supply from seven to three steins a day.

There the similarity ends, because Evans is the antithesis of Galento in physical appearance. He's a peaked-looking chap who seems almost too slight to be a top-flight flinger. He stands only five feet 10 1-2 and scales but 168 pounds. But he has such speed and such a baffling screwball that he's pretty sure to stick with the Gowanus Gam-

Roche and Middlekauf Grapple Here Tuesday

The heavyweight mat brigade comes roaring back to Warren Arena Tuesday night after an absence of more than six months.

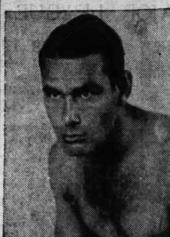

Matchmaker L. C. Warren announces the shows will be staged at the ball park as soon as the weather warms a bit.

Dorv Roche, former Scranton, Pa., coal miner, and Bill Middle-kauf, one-time University of Flor-ida fullback, who has become one of the leading toughies in the wrestling business, will headline the card in what shapes up as a topnotch headliner for the revival of the heavy shows here.

Lou Plummer, another former football great, having starred at Notre Dame, will meet Whitey Hewitt, veteran bad man, in the semi-final. Plummer is one of the game's ranking performers, while Hewitt consistently is a tough man to beat.

This will not be football night, but Harry Kent, who meets Alf Johnson, of Chicago, in the opening event, is another gridiron product. He was a standout guard at Minnesota a few years back.

Atlantans have for weeks expressed a keen desire to see a require of the heavy water here. turn of the heavyweights here and mat world will be presented in indications are the giants of the Atlanta this year.

John Smith Sparks Meet by Excellent Weight Performance: Low Hurdles Deciding Factor.

By CHARLIE ROBERTS. The Florida track team, sparked by John Smith, husky weight man, eked out a 64-62 victory over the favored Georgia Tech cinder-

The meet was a thriller to the bitter end. With only the 220-yard low hurdle race left on the docket, Tech trailed 60-57, and needed a first and second in the final event to win, or a first and third to tie the 'Gatormen in the dual meet. Manuel Plaxico, Tech's ace hurdler, forged ahead of Florida's Stevens just before hitting the tap to win first place, but Stevens was second and Raymond, of the 'Gators, ran straight game from the Barons, a close third to sew up the top honors for the boys from the resort state.

The Floridans' John Smith won three firsts to top all scorers with a 15-point total. Smith won the javelin throw, discus, and copped the shot-putting honors with a mighty heave of 47 feet 5 inches. 'GATORS LOSE.

(P)—The Jacksonville Tars, of the South Atlantic league, ended their spring exhibition baseball schedule today by taking a 12-to-5 decision from the University of Florida.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., April 15.

One answer to this Derby boom is the number of three-year-olds which have their chance to write turf history, provided the casualty list doesn't mow down the crop.

Churchill Downs on Derby Day is not exactly a happy hunting ground for long-shot players, intent on knocking the favorite down and making a big haul as some outsider comes pounding down to the wire. Now and then an outsider does win and then an outsider does win, of course. Twice in the last three years—when Bold Venture in 1936, and Lawrin in 1938 won —the favorite faltered or was lost in the scramble. Fighting Fox, last year's favorite, looked like a sure winner when he passed the clubhouse the first time but he folded on the back stretch and Jimmy Stout said as though the horse had died under him. He knew that the Fox, a gamer horse the peared to be that day, wouldn't come on again. But year in and year out, the Kentucky Derby favorites stand up very well, as, for instance, War Admiral did in 1937 and Omaha in 1935 and Cavalcade in 1934. There have been 64 Derbies so far and the figures on the favorites are impressive. Thirty-one favorites won, 16 finished second and two finished third, which means that from 1875 to 1938, inclusive, only 15 favorites finished out of the money.

The percentage here is much greater than it is in the regular run of racing. As an average, 35 per cent of the favorites win. The Derby average is a shade better than 48 per cent.

A Harder Test.

Year by year the Derby becomes a sterner test. Once horsemen about the country, especially the wealthier horsemen in the east frowned on the race because it is held so early in the season and imposes a strain on the colts that, win or lose, some of them do not and glamor of the race spread and the imagination of the public was caught by it, the prize became more attractive.

Now, with few exceptions, the best stables in the country aim for the Derby. They campaign their colts in Florida or California—believing that one race is worth a dozen works—or they winter in the north and bring them along easily and start them a couple of times at Jamaica or Keeneland or Chure hill. A colt that wins the Derby nowadays has done something. He has finished in front of the best field of 3-year-olds that, escaping all the hazards a young thoroughbred faces, have reach-ed the post in tip-top shape.

Out of the long history of the race, Frank Menke has dug some had clicked in 1926. Gallant Fox, the 1930 winner, stred Omaha, which won in 1935. A now forgotten horseman—A nteresting facts. For instar The purse for the first Derby-1 1875—was $1,000 and added in 1875 A now forgotten horseman—A.

Bold Venture Is Outstanding Mount in Roxboro Riding Club Junior Event.

By ROY WHITE.

Billy Black and his mount Bold Venture, one of the finest show horses in the city, proved outstanding Saturday afternoon in the annual Roxboro Riding Club Junior Horse Show, sponsored by the R. L. Hope Parent-Teacher Association.

Black won two of the beautiful array of trophies, in showing the way in both the junior and open three-gaited saddle class. And Bold Venture carried Black to victory in both events.

Maddox Whitley was the shining light in the adult classes, win-ning the walking class and the fine harness and also placing in the roadster class. He won a fourth place in the five-gaited open-saddle class, due to failure of his horse Kara Hahn to canter successfully. To many in the large crowd Whitley appeared a victor, but alert eyes of the judges quickly detected the horse's slowness in changing to the afternoon's exhibition, Mary Sutherland in the three-gaited class fainted and fell from her horse. She was taken from the show ring and quickly revived and returned to the sidelines as a spectator. A SMART HORSE.

Only one mishap marred the

A smart horse, Lady Margaret, stopped in his tracks as Mary fell to the ground and didn't move untile the spectators rushed into the ring and carried Miss Sutherland out. The crowd marveled at the horse standing perfectly still, even after Mary had been taken out of the show ring.

SLUM CLEARANCE VALUE POINTED OUT

Comptroller Blames Poor Housing for Crime, Disease Toll.

Slum clearance in Atlanta will result in considerable savings to taxpayers, B. Graham West, city comptroller, said yesterday in menting on the program of the Atlanta l'ousing Authority.

West explained that slums take their heaviest toll in crime, disease and fires. He reveald that last year municipal services designed to combat these three public enemies cost Atlanta taxpayers approxi-mately $2,651,000, or an average of approximately $34 per capita for the 79,317 taxpayers.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that slum inhabitants and slum conditions are respon share of these costs, and it log-ically follows that elimination of slums can only result in a very burden," West said.

Of the spring of ses concerned with prevention and cure of disease aggregated $806,653.83, and fire department costs amounted to $765,172.28. West praised weekly radio broadcasts of the Atlanta Housing Authority on "Atlanta Housing Au-thority on "Atlanta's Slums Cost You Money." The programs are broadcast over WSB at 6:15 o'clock each Wednesday night.

OPPORTUNITY GIVEN LIBRARY INCREASE

New Books Added to School Collection Already Holding 3,300

With the addition of 37 new books during last week which came as a donation from P. S. lward, principal of the school the total number of books now available to the students through he school library is 3,300. Accordng to the librarian, Miss Jane Gaetner, vocational education is being featured in the library and all available material is secured for reference. Copies of the voca-tion education bills which have been passed in congress from time to time and all available state and dederal books and pamphlets are on file.

An average of 25 books are issued daily to the students and large numbers find the library useful in their studies. Periodicals and books are used constantly by different departments of the school and students make use of any time which they have for reading.

Superintendent's Message

April 15, 1939.

My dear Boys and Girls:

On Friday, April 21, The Atlanta Constitution is sponsoring a fifth district band concert to be held at Georgia Tech stadium. The purpose of this great concert is to stimulate the study of music and the harmonious co-operative working together that is required in order to produce a good band.

I do not know of anything that could mean more to a student than joining an orchestra or a band. He must work in harmony with other people; he must study; he must be part of a group and must really learn the great lesson so essential to a successful life—the lesson of fitting his life, his plans and his ideals into the plans and ideals of others.

All the high school bands of the fifth district will participate in this great event. The boys and girls who belong to these bands and who work so hard deserve the support of the rest of the students of this district, and those who have not yet participated in the band but look forward to entering into some musical activities, should be interested in seeing what others are doing.

I wish to commend The Atlanta Constitution for the fine work they are doing and to ask the support of our young people and the men and women of this section for this very worthy enterprise.

Always your friend,

Always your friend,

WILLIS A. SUTTON, Superintendent of Schools.

Surroundings YOUR NEW HOME DESERVES

Here nature provides a setting that makes a house a home. The stately pine and hardwood trees, the graceful roll of the land and the refreshing charm of near-by waters are assets of undeterminable value. There are approximately 300 acres subdivided into lots of one hundred or more foot frontage. Included within this subdivision are two beautiful lakes covering 15 acres which have been well stocked for fishing. The corporation has made a successful effort to reduce building costs to owners. Through its connections, materials can be secured at a substantial discount. City water, light and telephone connections are available. The corporation also retains an architect and requires architectural supervision on all projects.

Miss Regina Weisz Weds Mr. Vernelson At Rectory Service

Miss Regina Barbara Weisz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Weisz, became the bride of De-Witt Ewing Vernelson last eve-ning in the rectory of the Sacred Heart church. Father Joseph Emmerth performed the ceremony at 8 o'clock in the presence of rela-tives and friends of the young couple.

Quantities of palms and fern were used in artistic arrangement as the decorations in the rectory.

Tall baskets filled with Easter lilies were placed amid the greenery adding an attractive effect.

Miss Elsie Vinkleman was the maid of honor and wore a model of navy blue trimmed in white organdy. Her hat and accessories matched and her flowers were a corsage of talisman roses. Mrs. Joseph Ihma was the matron of honor and also wore blue, her model being of silk crepe with matching accessories. Her flowers

Entering with her uncle, Joseph Ihms, by whom she was given in marriage, the bride was met at the altar by the groom and John Matrangos, who was the best man. She was an attractive figure in her three-piece suit of beige wool, the ensemble being completed by a scarf of Russian wolf. Her chiffon blouse was of chartreuse and her accessories were of black. She wore a cluster of orchids on her shoulder. Mrs. Weisz, mother of the bride, wore navy blue and her accessories were white. Her flowers were talisman roses.

After the ceremony, the couple was honored at an informal reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Weisz at their home on Maddox drive in Ansley Park. Mrs. J. D. Hart assisted her parents in entertaining. The home was decorated with quantities of gladioli, snapdragons and delphinium. The table in the dining room was covered with an Italian cut-work leth and centered with a tiered

Menu at Pickfair Soon To Include Muffins Made of Georgia Corn Meal

By Sally Forth.

CORN MEAL muffins made from Georgia corn meal will soon be served at Pickfair, the Beverly Hills home of Mary Pickford and Buddy Rogers, in California, the meal having been sent Miss Pickford by Mrs. Frank Freeman, who recently arrived in Atlanta to visit her mother, Mrs. H. J. Harris, on Peachtree street. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman and their son, Frank Jr., moved to California last year, you remember, when Mr. Freeman, vice president of Paramount Pictures, was sent to the coast in charge of operations, succeeding Adolf Zukor. And you should hear about the charming life they lead in Beverly

But to get back to the corn meal muffins, the lovely chatelaine of Pickfair gave a dinner as a farewell gesture to Mrs. Freeman, the former Margaret Harris, on the Sunday evening before her departure for Atlanta. As a distinct compliment to her honor guest, Miss Pickford served what she called "southern corn meal muffins." But when the butler passed them, they were nothing more than hot flour biscuits," Margaret told Sally Forth. "Very delicious hot biscuits, but certainly not corn meal muffins."

So one of Margaret's first acts on arriving in Atlanta was to order some genuine water-ground Georgia meal sent to Pickfair.

Among other guests at the dinner were Mr. and Mrs. Cole Por-ter and Dorothy Field, who wrote all the music for those catchy tunes in the current Broadway hit, "Stars in Your Eyes." Following dinner, some 30 or 40 members of the cinema colony were invited in to see movies in the private theater at Pickfair, after which a delicious midnight supper was served.

The Freemans have established residence in one of the dozen bungalows dotting the beautiful gardens of the Beverly Hills ho-tel, which are operated by the hotel. The bungalow was freshly decorated and refurnished in typical California style, according to Margaret's orders, with a sprinkling of handsome antiques to give it character. Everything must be light and airy, of course, to harmonize with the tropical atmosphere, for the bungalows are surrounded by orange and lemon trees, with giant calla lilies, gera-niums and other California blossoms peeping in at the windows and doorways. The Beverly Hills hotel is the substantial background of Beverly Hills. Built 40 years ago, it has retained its beauty and dignity, and has never "gone modern" to keep pace with the movie colony. An oriental air pervades the place, for the hotel is serviced by Filipinos, and it maintains the high standards of Old World hotel management. Its gardens present a veritable fairyland of brilliant and exotic bloom. Nowhere is life so colorful and varied as it is in California, ac-cording to Margaret, for the sea, the desert or the mountains may all be reached inside of a few hours. For instance, on a recent Sunday the Freemans, who live only about 15 minutes from the beach, motored down to fashionable Palm Springs, in the heart of the California desert, for lunch-eon. Then up in the Sierras for tea with their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Willard Keith, at Lake Arrowhead, where they found a light snowfall. And then down to San Bernardino in the valley for a dog show, dinner and a "sneak preview.

In case you are curious about a "sneak preview," this is what it means. After a picture is finished, a group of movie producers, directors and executives will take the film to a near-by town, advertise it without giving the name, and show it for the first time. This screening, of course, is for the purpose of "audience reaction," from which the movie bigwigs get 2 good idea of which scenes to eliminate, which to retake, and so on.

When Margaret returns to Cali-

When Margaret returns to California on April 25, she will be accompanied by her mother, who will be her guest for several weeks. En route they will stop in Omaha, Neb., for the grandpremiere of Cecil B. DeMille's
"Union Pacific," one of the mostimportant pictures of the year, which is scheduled for April 28.
Margaret and Mrs. Harris will Margaret and Mrs. Harris will join Mr. Freeman there for a three-day stay, and they will be most elaborately entertained every minute of the time. The gala occasion will assemble the gala occasion will assemble the important executives of the cinema world from both California and New York. In addition, the annual board meeting of the Union Pacific railroad has been transferred from San Francisco to Omaha to coincide with the premiere of the film, which traces the history and development of the great railway.

SALLY is informed that much of the courtship of Jennie Champion and Dr. Gene Nardin, whose betrothal is announced today, has been carried on over the telephone between the hours of 11 and 3 o'clock in the evenings! The first time Gene telephoned his future bride, the hands of the clock pointed to the number 3. Jennie was unperturbed over the lateness of the call, so nightly conversations became a habit. Gene, you know, is resident physician at Emory University hospital, where his professional duties tal, where his professional duties claim his attention during the earlier evening hours.

Dr. and Mrs. William Champion, parents of the popular bride-elect, were awakened so frequently by the jangling of the telephone, which Jennie hastened to answer, that when the belle's birthday occurred recently they had a private telephone installed in her room! Consequently, Cupid was allowed to continue his "night ow!" performances without disturbing the slumber of the senior Champions!

A ROMANCE of long standing will culminate in marriage on May 20 when petite blond Virginia Hart becomes the bride of Charlie Sumner. The betrothal of the young couple is announced today by the bride-elect' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Hart.

Sentiment figures prominently in the marriage date selected by the bridal pair, for May 20 will mark the fourth anniversary of the date when Charlie "popped the question" to his future bride!

At lower left one of the fourth graders reviews her work illustrating the way in which news pictures are received by wire, while the little girl at lower right studies the relative value of news pictures.

Key School Pupils Use The Constitution As Unit of Study

The Constitution has become a textbook for fourth grade students at the James L. Key school.

Mrs. T. Edward Moodie, fourth grade teacher, inaugurated the newspaper project in an effort to acquaint her pupils with the history and growth of Atlanta, but it has been expanded into a combination course in history, spelling, language, geography, music and reading.

Through a study of the history of The Constitution and the lives of its famous men-including Joel Chandler Harris, Frank L. Santon and Henry W. Grady-the students not only have gained a knowledge of the development of Atlanta but have become vitally interested in journalism and now have developed their own newspaper-the "L-4

"This unit of work was introduced by the children through their interest in a unit started earlier in the year on modern England," Mrs. Moodie explained.

"The children, ever eager to find pictures and news clippings of England and the royal family became more conscious of the newspaper and began to ask such questions as 'What does (A)' mean?' 'What is the meaning of wirephote?' Their interest became so great that we turned to the newspaper for our next unit of work, primarily to answer their questions. their questions

"We decided on The Atlanta Constitution as the paper to study because it seemed most closely asciated with the growth of Atlanta and was the oldest paper.

After making a study of the reconstruction days and the history of Atlanta, the students then turned to the organization and operation of a newspaper.

First, they took up the various departments of the newspaper—advertising, want ads, society, sports, composing, circulation and editorial. They followed the news from the reporter to the rewrite man, and through the copy desk, the composing room, the stereotype room and the press room.

paper. They learned how news and photographs are obtained from the Associated Press and the United Press and the part teletype machines, cablegrams, airplanes, telegraph, telephone and wirephoto play in the gathering of news.

To gain more direct contact with the presentday newspaper, the students visited The Constitu-tion building and studied the work of officials of newspaper, including the late Clark Howell Major Clark Howell, Ralph McGill, Ralph T. Jones and Kenneth Rogers.

There also was a visit to the Wren's Nest-home Joel Chandler Harris. And to obtain further background on the famous author, they invited Joel Chandler Harris Jr., his son, to speak to them.

By writing biographies of famous men connected with the newspaper and composing letters to present members of the staff, the students got valuable practice in writing, Mrs. Moodie explained. Their knowledge of geography was further enhanced by their excursions to points of interest in the city. By memorizing and singing songs of Frank L. Stanton, they brought music into the study. And they learned to appreciate good literature by "Writing also improved their spelling as well as their vocabularies," Miss Moodie said. "They learned the meaning of such technical terms as 'galley' and 'slug' and many others."

Mrs. Moodie is enthusiastic about the project, and thinks it might well be copied by other grammar schools. It also has possibilities of being expanded into a worth-while high school course, she pointed out. The project already has attracted the attention of other teachers throughout the city and more than 100 have visited the Key school to observe its

"It is one of the most well-rounded courses I have ever taught," Mrs. Moodie said. "Many of the pupils have gotten into a regular habit of reading The Constitution each day, and that alone is cer-

Principal aims of the project were outlined as 1. To give the children an understanding and appreciation of one of the most vital instruments in a community.

2. To instill an interest in community, state national and world events.

3. To broaden the horizon of the children's To awaken in them a consciousness of the important activities all about them in the life of their community.

5. To have them contact vital personalities.

5. To have them contact vital personalities.

6. To develop a creative urge in language.
Besides providing practical lessons in language, spelling, music, geography and reading, Mrs. Moedie thinks it also has resulted in an awakened interest in news events, a greater appreciation of the influence of the activity of the community in the children's own lives, a greater interest in each other's lives and activities, an appreciation of community leaders both past and present a knowledge munity leaders both past and present, a knowledg of Atlanta's growth in the last 70 years and a cul tivation of contacts by letters and visits with outstanding personalities.

The classfoom is decorated with numerous pictures, sketches, written work and newspapers—a constant reminder of the benefits the students have gained from their study of the newspaper.

A GREENHORN RIDES AN ENGINE

By BILL MUNDAY.

Disillusionment discovered, as senility creeps! Once upon a time—when Mr. Theodore Roosevelt was endeavoring with an inherent mind of diplomacy to settle the Russo-Japanese war-there was a wee, mere cherub-hardly an entity-down at Montezuma who would walk a mile and a half each day to be thrilled by the arrival of the morning train. And when the fireman jerked that rope, majestic in his left seat to ring the bell, he deter-mined that some day he would be in a contem-

Promptly on the hour we started. Now! Mr. Cooper was shoveling in the coal, Mr. Hamilton had "his hand on the throttle and his eye on the rail" yet the bell was ringing—resonantly, clear and in regular cadence.

No one, however, was pulling the cord. The greenhorn perceived that the rope, leading to the sounder, was connected to the engineer's side, but no one was handling it. And it was ding donging y with furore. When Mr. Cooper had finished his choresmentarily—of gouging his furnace with fresh and necessary fuel, the greenhorn, heart-broken because he couldn't pull that string and ring that bell, feebily inquired why. "Because sir," he modestly explained. "Modern gadget, turned by hand, that the engineer operates.

nation, anyway.

Few realize and comprehend the detailed and efficient labor that is behind running of a train. Take the dispatcher—on this line—his office is in Atlanta, then there is one in Chattanooga. Every second they are in touch with each train-freight or passenger—they issue orders and they must be obeyed. When emergencies occur they immediately must be notified by flagmen, employing telephones, stationed at strategic points, to obviate any accidents in routing their "babies."

To illustrate—the greenhorn's train was no farther out than Bolton when Engineer Hamilton received his first dispatcher orders. They read: "Clearance Card Form A., April 7, 1939—to Conductor and Enginemen Train No. 6—I have three orders for your train. "I see those orders, Mr. Hamilton, but why did the agent hand you that slip in front anent the number of orders you had?" questioned the green-

He's the boss of the train, his authority being analogous of a sea captain-he can throw you in chains if he considers it appropos.

To emphasize how diligently the engineers and conductors obey and how each second are informed, it might be pointed out here that, following a delay Vinings to meet a freight on the jaunt north,

BASEBALL'S 100TH ANNIVERSARY

By HIRAM J. HERBERT.

On April 18 baseball will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the game by which it is now known, and somewhere in Valhalla, Abner Doubleday is peer. For 100 years ago, at Coopersfield, N. Y., Abner Doubleday put across the idea that konking a runner on the bean, or elsewhere on his fleeing anatomy, was not the sportsman's way of throwing a runner out. He had a hard time doing this, because it was conceded fun to hurl a player out in the same manner of knocking blackbirds off a fence with rocks.

Doubleday also constructed more order in the Doubleday also constructed more order in the game by inaugurating a regular-shaped diamond with evenly spaced bases, and where before there had been anywhere from 15 to 35 men on a "side," the players were reduced to 11 per team. In such a way Doubleday succeeded in changing "town ball" to baseball, in which a runner must be tagged out instead of knocked out. Thus the old game of one o'cat, which the New Englanders had threatened to legislate out of existence, passed from town ball to baseball in 1839.

Such sportive and wasteful antics were indulged in by only the youngsters and college boys, a game of rough-house plain and simple. Casualties were numerous—more numerous than the piled-up runs. But in the early 1840's the public was astounded to find serious-minded adults taking up the game; in fact, the first team, the Knickerbockers, became organized in New York—and 'lo, even in the first organized in New York—and 10, even in the life-game played by this team, the two traditions of baseball were born which have not been changed to this day; first, the alibi, and, second, the fact that nothing is sure and certain in the game until very last ball is pitched.

The Izaak Waltons' fabulous tales of the "finny giant that got away" have never, and will never, hold the faintest whisper of a sway with the immortal alibis of how the baseball game was lost only by a frog's hair and just why that hair was in the way. The baseball alibi, incidentally, was born in Hoboken, not in Brooklyn.

The game spread out through the eastern United States like the raging waters of a flood, saturating States like the raging waters of a flood, satisfaction of the every hamlet and metropolis with the ardor of the greatest of games—but still it lacked popular dignity and the support of the pulpit. It possessed a rowdy classification, sufficiently "immoral' to war-rant an unparalleled zest. It wasn't considered a truly gentleman's game.

Came the gold-rush days, which in interrupting the eastern game was directly responsible for its spread to the west, even to Honolulu. Alexander Cartwright was arranging with a wagon train for the transportation of himself and his baggage to the coast. Arose the question of hauling a needless stick of wood that looked like a whiffle-tree carved into some hideous shape; but Cartwright paid an additional $5 for the transportation of this crude baseball bat. However, not until 1884, in Louisville, Ky., was the first real baseball bat manufactured. It was 37 inches in length, and weighed

48 ounces.
Contributing further to the glamorous growth of the famous and fiery game a committee of dignified gentlemen from the Chicago convention came to Springfield, Ill., one balmy afternoon in 1860. They found their tall, angular man strolling to the plate, hefting the old ringing ash. But not did Mr. Lincoln accept from the amazed committee his nomination on the Republican ticket for the presidency of the United States. And soon afterwards, as history has its curious of shaping affairs of men, Abner Doubleday, who had established order and sportsmanship in the game of "town ball," fired the first shot on Fort Sumter. But here, again, the tragic fires that men build gave greater glory to baseball-for the northern soldiers taught the game to the southerners. At Richmond they played catch across the battlelines between skirmishes. In time, the Red Stockings organized the first professional team, winning in their first season 56 out of 57 games played. Then Cummings, observing the behaviour of the clam shells he sailed out over the sound, threw the first curve—baseball had suddenly become a real and difficult science. Close upon this, in 1871, Bill Hulbert formed an association, and big money entered into the game, the buying and selling of players. This was the National league, and because Hulbert advocated and demanded cleanliness in the game, it quickly achieved public respect.

Other leagues popped up in rapid succession, and inevitably dissention developed. The players didn't like the idea of being sold like slaves. The Spanish-American War broke into this period, and then the American league was formed by Johnson in 1902. This was the big boost, and the first World Series was played the following year. The two great men in baseball, Connie Mack, and his Athletics, and John J. McGraw, and his Giants, met in 1905. The battle raged, thousands of umpires were "killed," thousands more pitchers were taken out and "hung," "tarred-and-feathered," "exiled." In 1919 the owner of the Chicago White Sox discovered crookedness in his own players. He fired them, taking a tremendous financial loss and just about breaking up his club; but that was the way he felt about the game. Although these accurace about breaking up his club; but that was the way he felt about the game. Although these accused and banished players, their guilt proved to the public, were acquitted by a Chicago law court, the incident resulted in the appointment of Judge Landis as the czar of baseball. The game has yielded an even savory flavor even since even savory flavor ever since.

What remains of baseball's history is more or less current, an ever joyful, ever vibrant story. No two games, although played repeatedly by the very same teams, are ever the same. Each inning is a new thrill, each pitched ball a new conquest. Each swing of the bat is an historical event, and millions yell and scream in a beautiful and soul-satisfying rhythm that can arise from no other source on this raythm that can arise from no other source on this earth or in this life. The meek little office clerk wearing the horn-rimmed spectacles and leaving the hulking, taunting brute of a wife at home, becomes for the period of nine glamorous innings the master of all he surveys from his little, cramped, hard seat in the stands. He screams aloud his anathemas at the umpire, the fine-formed pitcher, the bulwarked catcher. It is his escape from oppression and the rule of the domestic tyrants.

pression and the rule of the domestic tyrants.

There remains little wonder, then, that a game that can do this should rank first in the hearts of the nation. From the little dirty-faced ragamuffins in the vacant lot where the city's rubbish is dumped, playing with a battered, heavily taped ball and a 10-cent bat, to the Colonel Rupperts of the kingdom of the clubs worth millions of dollars, the game—the spirit of the game—tugs at the emotions of man and boy to make the boy a man, and the man a boy!

one of the wonders of the modern world is baseball's hall of fame. To attain a seat in this heaven of sportdom a baseball player must receive the vote of 75 per cent of all baseball writers. Throughout all its 100 years of roaring history only 12 immortal members sit in this hall of fame.

Two things only, in this era of turmoil, seem important: Baseball's hall of fame and 'When Casey Came to Bat."

The Beetle Will Get Your Garden If You Don't Watch Out

By BILL MUNDAY.

This afternoon when you shuttle over to the family friends' abode to pick up the Gentleman who thinks he is the boss and the Lady who in reality is generalissimo-and Junior and Catherine-to view Georgia's famous dogwood, full bloomed, accord your thanks to the State Department of Entomology. This department, headed by Manning S. Youmans, constantly and relentlessly is an endeavor to thwart the ravages of the destructive Japanese beetle-a parasite which would lay waste not only dogwood but his own home in his ruthless pursuit

"He has shown up here-strangely, not throughout the state-and unless we assiduously pursue his annihilation-we will have no dogwood-or anything else," Mr. Yeomans says.

"We have conquered him, though, sincerely, I believe. Relentlessly, for two years ours has been his battle. He comes here in June and July, fee on grass and roots, lays eggs in the ground, to be hatched during the winter. When we are informed that a full-grown maestro is on a tree discoveredwe spray the land within a 300-foot radius with arsenate of land, portioned with water,
"If farmers would follow our advice I think we could exterminate the boll weevil. We have aided thousands, answering their requests. Six pounds of calcium-arsenate, dusted, to the acre will destroy the pest. But, as the case last year, the planters lost because they did not spray enough. A rainy season washed off their potential, executing poison and the weevil was enabled to attain a foot-hold, or rather, a piercing toe-hold.

trop and Omega are under our supervision. Before planted the seeds are inspected, the land on which they are supposed to become entities is examined and then when they sprout, if verified, they may be shipped for transplanting.

"Now we'll go into insects regimentally—

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to love, so aver the sooth-sayers. And, by the same token, thousands of garden insects seriously divert their attention from hibernation to the destruction of plants," Mr. Yeomans continues.

'They are the 'rats' of vegetation, not snooping around warehouses for their banditry, but flying around all that nature creates—productive and beautiful—to devastate and rent wantonly asunder.

"So this being the time of year when urban folk are busily and hopefully engaged in their flower sectors it should be appropriate and welcomed advice to admonish them that when the flying down state the sectors." ing demons attack their 'growing pets,' and they are in a quandary as to what to do, they will be accorded advice—and with a smile—from the State Board of Entomolgy.

"Now the garden devotee is at labor with avid contemplation—setting out his plants, and it would not be amiss, I think, to tell him something relative

There are thousands of the pests-languid during winter, but plenty spry in the spring and summer—each planning and conniving to destroy his share of the blossoms and plants in order to fulfill his life's mission—that of increasing his kind,

"Insects are a problem to Americans, annually extracting a toll of $3,000,000,000. The farmer is not the only person that has his boll weevil, the rose partisan has his leaf beetles, rose slugs, roseleaf-hoppers, red spiders, aphids and countless other enemies and the gardener whose delight is wild plants such as rhododendron, must battle the lace-bug, the giant hornet, the rhododendron clearwing, the ambrosia beetle, the broad-necked Prionus and many others. So it is obvious that the problem of insect control is well divided among farmers

"With so many pests attacking every plant we grow, the enigma, at first, is so tremendous that the planter hesitates to inaugurate a garden. But, after studying basic points on insect control, he perceives that they are a problem only when nothing is done

"Consider insect control! Generally speaking, times will be noticed that there are small, scaley insects on the trunks and limbs. To 'get them out of the league' use a strong contact spray which con-

Manning S. Yeomans, head of the State Department of Entomology, is doing much to eradicate the Japanese beetle.

we have two main types of insects, each coming under different classifications. "First, take the caterpillar or beetle, an insect that cuts away the leaves and buds, consuming large quantities of plant growth. So, with ratiocination, if we place a thin coating of some poison on the leaf or plant growth being destroyed, that is toxic to the insect and will not burst the plant, it will facilitate our efforts to save our plants from the ravages of this variety of pest. "What are some of the chemicals used to kill this type? Well, the standard poison employed for years to annihilate chewing insects is arsenate of lead, used either as a dust or spray on the plants. As a spray, the mixture of one ounce of arsenate to two gallons of water is most effective. This mixture should be sprayed on all foliage besieged by beetles or caterpillars. On very tender plants it is advisable to add one ounce of hydrated lime to the mixture to obviate any possible arsenate burn. Generally, during fair weather, one application of arsenate of lead spray concoction will slaughter the insects. During rainy season the gardener must be certain that he has an even coating on the plants at all times and, if the rain has washed off the poison, he should put on a second or even a third application. Arsenate is deadly, and spray material should be kept away from

"Another type of insecticide for chewing in-sects is Derris. Derris is a plant root, toxic to in-sects and, when ground to fine dust, is an ideal destroyer of many. A good grade of Derris, used at the rate of one ounce to eight ounces of sulphur, is very effective. Derris is non-poisonous to animals and, for this reason, is extensively used in place of the arsenicals. Either of these materials, though, should be death-knells to many flower in-"The other main insect group, such as plant lice or red spiders, or the scales, that cluster on young, growing leaves and buds, injure the plant by sucking its juices. These insects, in most cases, have a specialized feeding apparatus in the form of a beak which they insert into the leaf, stem or bloom and withdraw life-providing juices. Regular 'vampires,' did you say

"Reverting to the subject—it is easily seen that spray covering the outside of the plant (such as arsenate and Derris spray) would not have a scintilla of a chance in precipitating their demise. Since it is impossible to inject a poisonous material into the sap of the plant without killing it, a different method of obliteration must be pursued for the inject. So to get rid of plant lice mites and this insect. So to get rid of plant lice, mites and sucking insects it is imperative that a spray be brought in direct contact.

"The spray materials? For most small, sucking insects a nicotine dilution, one ounce of Black Leaf 40 to three gallons of water into which a small piece of soap has been dissolved is one of the most suc-cessful ingredients of wholesale massacre now "On shrubbery or other hardy plants it some-tains emulsified oil. For the average gardener I would advise him to purchase oil emulsions, already prepared. On most plants, during summer, e per cent oil will give scale control. However, it is recommended that the dilutions specified by the "And remember, when fighting any insect, examine the plant to detect his harassment—if the foliage is being cut—then apply your Derris or arsenical spray. first noticed, they will wreck wee havoc." "But, Mr. Yoemans," the newspaperman queried, "cite the care of one particular flower—your own choice-to be sure.'

"Well," the savant of anti-insect life drawled, "demonstrative of the machinations of these control suggestions we will take roses. When the plants have their spring growth and appear to be riddled with insect 'fever' we'll revert to our control suggestions, recalling that one that cuts the foliage requires a spray of the leaves. So an arsenate of lead dose will murder him. Roses, also, are susceptible to mildew and leaf spot, and so when shooting on a poison in this instance we commonly should dilute our arsenate of lead with sulphur which gives us a mixture that jointly handles the disease and the insect. Those desiring such a mixture should use one part arsenate of lead to eight parts of dusting sulphur and apply the mixture as a dust over the plant at the first sign of either the insect or the disease. A thin coat of dust at all times must be maintained on the foliage. times must be maintained on the foliage.

"Roses also are victims or plant lice or aphids Here again we must retrograde to our control idea. they insert their beaks into the young, tender growth, removing the sap, which causes imperfect and stunted development. When this emergency arises spray thoroughly with nicotine or Black

"Although roses may be 'encircled' by many pests, usually a complete dusting with arsenate of lead and sulphur and perhaps one or two spot sprayings with nicotine will make nonentities of 'major rose-cultivations pests.'"

Again on location to Forty Acres in the cool of a late-in-March morning. By 7 a. m. things are humming when work is to be done at the acrescameras, sound equipment and all the rest of the paraphernalia necessary to the filming of a picture, are being assembled. Thirty Kleig lights, weighing 350 pounds each, are being placed at just the correct angles. Besides the principals in the cast, 350 extras are being "made up" and costumed. Horses, mules, carriages, buggies, farm wagons, and big covered army supply wagons are getting in line.

Imagine the responsibility there is in assembling and directing such a tremendous setup! Yet it is done with such efficiency that one little realizes the effort behind it. All is in readiness by 9:30, when rehearsing begins, and, at the shouted commands of Director Victor Fleming and his assistant, Eric Stacey, standing on a platform before their microphones, this milling assemblage assumes the form and character of the citizens of Atlanta in 1863 when they are anxiously waiting outside the Examiner office, where casualty lists from Gettysburg are being distributed-news which they fear and dread to hear.

I sat on a cotton bale in the railroad yards and looked north up Peachtree street toward Five Points. I could see the old Jonathan Norcross store, where now stands our imposing First National Bank building. A little further away stands the mercantile establishment of David Mayer, one of Atlanta's first citizens, while just around the corner is the Trout house: there is the National hotel. which figured so prominently in reconstruction days, and which will have its part in later sequences of the picture. Directly in front of me, I could see the building occupied by the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company agency, which, according to history, was robbed one day in the early 50's by thieves who are said to have set fire to a cotton warehouse nearby, thus creating an opportunity for looting the bank's safe.

Oh, the numbers of stories that kept running through my mind of things that had happened in this historic location! Just south of where I sat was the famous Bush Arbor, where Senator Ben Hill launched his celebrated Philippic against bayonet rule in Georgia during reconstruction. Over in the city park to the northeast was where the flag was raised on the occasion of ex-President Millard Fillmore's visit to Atlanta in 1854, and there at the right of the banking company stood the Atlanta hotel, where the dinner and ball were given in his honor. (It is at this hotel that Captain Rhett Butler and "Uncle" Henry Hamilton are paying

Just in front of me was the well into which Judge John P. King, president of the Georgia railroad, almost fell when he arrived in Atlanta from Augusta, on the evening of September 15, 1845, to be present on the gala occasion celebrating the completion of that road to Atlanta. The well was covered after this near accident. We see it in the picture, its visible appurtenances being a pump and a horse trough.

A modern steel and concrete bridge now spans the space where on the Forty Acres I sat this day and visualized happenings of long ago; and where I saw enacted scenes from "Gone With the Wind," a drama unique in motion picture history.

During an intermission I just had time to cross the tracks and offer my personal congratulations to Clark Gable, who, dressed in the character of Rhett Butler-white linen suit and large straw hat -was sitting by the horse trough in front of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company. Mr. Gable, as all of you know, has just married lovely Carole Lombard and everyone here has wished for this young couple the very best.

During lunch hour, Lou Forbes, musical director, had a quartet of negroes in the car shed practicing the song, "Go Down, Moses." This rehearsal was for the sake of establishing harmonies and rhythm. A long line of negroes on their way to the construction of the city fortifications will render this song as they march along. While we sat scattered about in the old "Garden of Allah" sets, and ate our luncheon, this distant music came to us-the melody of the perfectly blended voices lending an enchanting appeal.

There were a number of prominent personages visiting the Forty Acres sets, among them, Walter Wanger, producer; Dr. and Mrs. Rufus B. von Klein Smid, the doctor being president of the University of Southern California, and Alexander Loudon, minister from the Netherlands,

Despite the serious business in hand Saturday, a spirit of levity was rampant during rest periods between shots, its being All Fools' Day. The most successful gag was the exploding pocketbook. This was planted in Peachtree street between Five Points and the railroad, and woe to the suckers who picked it up! The "grips" had their fun, toothey planted percussion caps under planks that had to be nailed down. These, together with the whirring airplanes which seemed to be holding a convention overhead, and a teasing sunshine, conspired to make the day a memorable one.

On the following Tuesday another impressive spectacle was staged on the Atlanta sets. This time the iron ring of Federal siege operations of 1864 encircled the city; shellfire terrorized the citizenry, many of whom fled from their homes, refuging down state. Pictorial limitations called for a brief but vivid representation of these stirring events, compact of incidents, spectacular and dramatic. What with some 500 extras together with horses, mules, dogs and all manner of wheeled vehicles of the period, much dust was raised in Peachtree street. And the dust was of the right

Here, indeed, was the reverse of war's bright medal. The alarms and excursions vouchsafed us were not at all along the lines of the pictures in the history books, but we had most satisfactory substitutes. In colorful pagentry we beheld that portion of Atlanta's citizens who thought it high time to leave, when shells began to pop - their household good and chattels piled high in wagons. With them moved the cross-current of shifting soldiery, alert to threatened points in the defense lines-a battery of field pieces manned by war-worn artillery men. Not parlor soldiers these, but the bronzed, bewhiskered guardians of Colonel L. P. Grant's 12 miles of earthen battlements.

Not to be overlooked, there appeared the pick and shovel brigade which kept up and added to the defense works-these dusky laborers who sang as they marched and delved-and sang not of cotton fields and canepatches, but of their yearning for ultimate escape from bondage, as embodied in the mournful dirge-"Go Down Moses." The rendering of this ancient spiritual will haunt the spectator when he has forgotten much of the rest.

Over all sounded the diapason of exploding shells; and, speaking of explosions, I had a nearadventure with one. Grandstand seats not being available at the "Siege of Atlanta," there being no bales of hay or cotton around, I placed one large on top of another and arranged myself comfortably where I could watch the goings-on.

Pretty soon a man came up and touched me on the shoulder saying, "Lady, if I were you I wouldn't sit there because," pointing to a queerlooking contraption not over 10 feet away, "that's a charge of powder fixed to blow things up around here when action begins!" I stood not on the order of my going-in a second I was so far away that I do not believe he heard the "thank you" that I called to him over my shoulder.

This charge of powder did blow up a little later, covering us all with dirt and dust. A fragment of something fell right at my feet. I picked it upa souvenir of the "siege." These explosions are arranged and managed so as to be 100 per cent safebut even that knowledge does not take from the excitement that prevails nor from the thrill that one gets in viewing such a scene.

Just before Mr. Fleming called, "camera!" Mr.

Kurtz and I, standing together, noticed Vivien Leigh (Scarlett), on the church steps awaiting her cue. She saw us at the same time, smiled a greeting, and waved to us over the crowds. She is such a friendly, gracious, little person, we like her tremendously, and so will all of you when you see her as the heroine in this great picture, "Gone With the Wind."

After luncheon we went to Five Points, where we watched other phases of the scene. Here we stood on a plank sidewalk near an iron horserack and viewed the most spectacular scene of all. You will see it in the picture, so I will not describe it here; suffice it to say you will not be disappointed in its dramatic appeal.

Glancing over my shoulder I noticed a sign which read, "Dr. Joshua Gilbert, Physician and Surgeon"-my great uncle! Dr. Gilbert married Miss Martha Butler, of Griffin, Ga. (no relation of Rhett's), my grandmother's sister. Dr. "Josh," as he was familiarly known, was Atlanta's first practicing physician. Another sign, just above this one, "L. C. Simpson, Lawyer"—the first man in Atlanta to practice law. Across the street I read, "Er Lawshe, Jeweler,"-the Lawshe family-members of which are still living in our city.

Few sojourners to the west coast escape the challenge of a visit to the Huntington library and art gallery, with their beautiful gardens. This gorgeous estate, once owned by Henry E. Huntington, railroad magnate, was given by its owner to the public and is now a museum in which are housed priceless pieces of art, rare books and old manu-scripts. The house and grounds are indescribably beautiful. From the terraces and balconies, the yiew is a semi-circular panorama of loveliness, the deep valleys below and the purple mountains in the distance. Trees, shrubs and flowers from all parts of the world grow here, transplanted someone who must have loved them.

I enjoyed the Japanese gardens most—the little arched bridges painted a vivid red, the waterfalls and fountains! The cactus gardens are intriguing too. "Tis said that there are 2,000 varieties here. while one would hardly call the cactus plant a thing of beauty, certainly its different specimens

Hollywood Shorts, According to Chertock

Jack Chertock, former Atlantan, who went to Hollywood several years ago and crashed the producin end of movies. He is the person responsible for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's shorts.

By ROBERT BURKHARDT.

Shorts are now the style in Hollywood! But it's not the abbreviated trouser that has taken the motion picture capital by storm. It's the short subject, which is rapidly carving a unique niche for itself and has risen in prominence to threaten the class B picture as a consistent moneymaker for movie producers.

Jack Chertock, an Atlanta boy who went to Hollywood several years ago to "crash" the producing gates, is one well qualified to speak au-thoritatively on short subjects. Now in charge of producing short subjects for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, Chertock recently returned to Atlanta to tell his uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. Louis Roughlin, about his life in the film capital. He was accompanied by his lovely wife.

"Short subjects, or 'shorts' as they are called in Hollywood, are interesting from two standpoints," Chertock explained. "First, they are now recognized throughout the movie industry as a separate business, one which requires specialized handling. And second, they are small-scale productions in which experimentation with actors and subject matter is

The first point made by Chertock is an interest-ing one. From early slap-stick comedy, the shorts have grown to a dignified industry which puts the accent on educational interest. Typical of this change is Pete Smith. Formerly a member of Metro's publicity department, Smith began his active movie work in a few slap-stick comedies. When sound came in, he made the running remarks in shorts that needed a com-From there he graduated to the latest vogue in From there he graduated to the latest vogue in shorts—serious subjects. Among Smith's latest productions are "Fisherman's Paradise," "Jungle Juveniles," "Fisticuffs," "Sports on Ice," "Ski Champions" and "Double Diving." In all of these the emphasis has been placed on subjects that will be educational as well as interesting.

With the decline in the double feature bill, shorts have sprung into widespread demand. To fill that demand, and yet to keep away from the idea of a small scale copy of a full length movie has been the particular job of Chertock.

It is only necessary to mention that he is the guiding light behind the Robert Benchley series of shorts to make it clear how well he is succeeding in his appointed task. The Benchley shorts, in-cidentally, are running into difficulties. Rural motion picture fans can't make sense from Benchley's subtle take-offs on modern social problems!

To pacify this important source of revenue, and to make things generally clearer, Benchley, who writes as well as acts in the productions, will here-after keep his scripts down to the more simple and understandable problems in life. Such widespread favorites as "The Courtship of the Newt," and "How to Raise a Baby" in the Benchley series will continue, however. Along another track, Chertock has found the short subject to be an ideal medium of bringing brief, but colorful episodes in history to the screen In M.-G.-M.'s historical series, "The Rock," and "The Face in the Iron Mask," popularly acclaimed. Similar pieces are now being worked upon. Experimentation in subject matter, mentioned by Chertock, was revealed to include such subjects for filming as Psychology, Crime Doesn't Pay, Won-ders of Science, and matters touching the sociological, the psychological, the physiological, and the spiritual—all generally considered taboo in the production of full length features.

With the advent of a short on the federal prison system, to be released shortly, Chertock thinks that a new series may be started. If the public reacts favorably, more shorts, with social institutions as their subject, will be produced.

One of the most frankly experimental shorts to be produced will be turned out by M.-G.-M. and Chertock, when he inaugurates the first of a series based on the best short stories that are found suitable for motion picture production. Man in the World," short story which won the O'Henry Memorial Award last year as the best written, is the first scheduled for production, Chertock said. The motion picture version will be preceded by a brief screen notice informing the public that it is by way of an experiment, and asking for written comment as to whether the series should Acting in shorts has undergone a transformation.

Where formerly the subjects were chosen and the plot written to fit a certain actor, or acting team, such as Laurel and Hardy, for instance, now subjects are chosen for audience appeal, and actors picked afterwards. Two exceptions, of course, are Robert Benchley and the players in "Our Gang"

Under this new system several outstanding actors have been discovered." Among these is Robert Taylor, of classic profile fame. Taylor first appeared in movies in an M.-G.-M. short entitled "Buried Loot," one of the first of the Crime Does not Pay series.

Besides Pete Smith and Taylor, are Ann Rutherford and George Murphy, both of whom began in short subjects. And if talent displayed in those shorts is indicative of anything, then several stars of today are going to get some keen competition in a short while. Harry Bacquet, director of Lionel Barrymore in the "Dr. Kildare" pictures, is another up-and-coming young man who began in short No figures have been released about the relative financial strength of short subjects, but it is well known that they are consistantly in the black ink, Some of this is due to small budgets, but a great deal is due to shrewd producing and an eye on the public's tastes. The shorts, like the good class B pictures and the Wild West thrillers, have an ex-cellent record on the financial books and frequently t as a cushion for an extravaganza that flops.

The future of the short subjects? It is almost act as a cushion for an extravaganza that flo unpredictable, according to Chertock. But this much is certain, he says. As long as people demand that their evening's screen entertainment be broken up for variety, the short subject will stay in demand.

And with the public taste in short flims constantly changing, new ideas and new faces must be pressed into service. So, Chertock opinions, where the full length feature appears to have produced itself into a run, the short subject, in order to exist, will have to keep presenting new and fresh things to feed the public's entertainment maw.

Thus, as a travelogue short would put it, we sail away from the mystic port of Hollywood, where if the shorts get too long they will dissappear.

WHEN JUSTICE TRIUMPHED

Case of Hindu Who Used Germs As His Weapon

By PETER LEVINS.

The following events took place in India—a fact which should be kept in mind, in case the reader is inclined to doubt the story. India, we know, is a fantastic sort of land and so we should not be surprised when fantastic things happen there.

Our story really starts in 1930, with the death of Kumar Pratapendra Nath Pande, head of a high caste Calcutta family which owned considerproperty near the city of Pakaur. His death orphaned his two sons and caused his estate, the income of which was largely rent from tenant farmers,

These two sons are the principals of the tale. They were half-brothers Benoyendra Nath Pande, child of a first marriage, whose mother died when he was three years old; and Amarendra Nath Pande, 10 years younger, whose mother died when he was but six days old. Both boys had been reared by an aunt.

Benoyendra, the elder son, called Benoy for short, as his brother was called Amar, took full charge of the estate after the death of his father, for Amar at that time was but 16 and would not reach his majority until Benoy, it soon became apparent, did not administer the estate as unselfishly as he might.

For one thing, he became reluctant about advancing funds to Amar, who was attending school at Patna University. Instead of sending the halfbrother his regular remittances, he either delayed this matter, or sent only a part of the amount. Often, had to come to the rescue when Amar

The outraged younger brother took action as soon as he reached his ma-He decided to petition the courts for a partition of the inheri-tance—which would mean that Benoy would lose the administration of the entire estate. Amar also moved to tie up a bank account of 12,000 rupees—about $3,400—which the two brothers had jointly in a Calcutta bank.

This carries us to a certain occurrence on October 23, 1932.

At that time Amar was spending his vacation with his aunt at Deoghar, a city northwest of Calcutta, where the family maintained one of several Benoy came out from Calcutta to have dinner with them that October day. Before dinner Amar and Benoy took a walk together. That same evening Benoy returned to Calcutta.

The following morning Amar com-plained of feeling ill. His speech failed him, his eyes could not stand the light, and he seemed unable to use his legs.

The local doctor, deciding that it lockjaw, immediately injected anti-tetanus serum, and Amar quickly showed signs of recovery.

Meanwhile, Benoy, when informed of his brother's illness, hastened back to Deoghar, accompanied by a Calcutta physician, Dr. Taranath Battacharya. However, this doctor seemed over-young to Amar's aunt, with the result that when Dr. Battacharya prescribed some medicine the Ranj saw to it that the remedy was poured ering his powers of speech, gave the following account of what happened: While taking that before-dinner walk with Benoy, the latter had shown him a pair of dark sunglasses which he had brought along from Calcutta. Playfully Benoy had suggested that Amar try them on. Amar did so

'They seem to set too loose," said

With that he pressed down hard on the bridge of his brother's nose. Result—a tiny incision, which caused a slight trickle of blood.

That night, when Benoy returned to his home in Calcutta, he took the glasses with him. To Amar's aunt, there was something suspicious, as well as fright-ening, about this incident. Accordingly, she forbade him against ever being alone in his brother's company.

Now let us look into the activities of Benoy's doctor friend from Cal-

Dr. Taranath Battacharya, a recent graduate of the Calcutta School for Tropical Medicine, had been interest-ing himself in finding a cure for bubonic plague. Bubonic plague, age-old scourge of India, is bred in infected rats, and humans are infected via rat fleas. Since the spring of 1932, he had been trying to obtain a culture of plague germs.

Why? What else but for use in his important researches?

Dr. Battacharya, indeed, had an-nounced that he had found an easy cure for bubonic plague—although, strangely enough, he did not publish his discovery, nor did he give friends In the spring of 1932 Battacharya had approached Dr. A. C. Ukil, director of tuberculosis research at the All-India Institute of Hygiene at Calcutta, with a request for a tube of plague culture. His purpose, he said, was to check the results of his cure. Dr. Akil declined. He pointed out that plague culture could not be removed from the institute except with the written permission of the surgeon Hearing this, the visitor suddenly changed his request. He said that if he couldn't have plague culture, then he would like to have some tetanus

He got the tetanus germs. Tetanus . . . tetanus . . . the sun glasses . . .

The story moves on to the following April, 1933, when Benoy journeyed to Bombay, on the west coast, and dropped in to see Dr. P. B. P. Naidu, director of plague research inquiry at the celebrated Haffkine Institute.

Benoy stated that a friend of his, a doctor who specialized in plague research, had perfected a cure for bubonic plague, but needed some live culture to check his findings. In ef-fect, the visitor said he would like to make his friend a present of some

Out of the question, he was told. But Benoy wasn't easily discouraged. He returned in July and this me negotiated with one Dr. Patel, another notable at the institute.

"I realize that the institute can-not dispense plague germs," said Benoy. "However, my friend would like to come here with some white rats, so that the rats might be infected here at the institute.

Dr. Patel couldn't see anything wrong in that.

Benoy immediately wired Dr. Battacharya, who arrived in Bombay on July 11 and registered at his friend's hotel. The doctor informed the hotel nager that he wished to buy some white rats. The manager obligingly shop, where two animals were pur-

"I am sadly disillusioned," sighed Dr. Battacharya. "I shall go back to Calcutta and continue my researches, for I feel sure I am on the right

That same day he and Benoy checked out of their hotel and left for Calcutta.

Which carries our story to the fol-lowing November 26, 1933. On that day, a Sunday, Ranj Sur-jabati set out from Calcutta, with various young relatives for the family estate at Pakaur. The party included Amar, a sister, and a girl cousin. They left their Calcutta residence at 12:45 p. m. and journeyed by taxi to the Howrah railroad station, where they were to take the 1:10 train for

When they reached the station. Benoy met them and joined the party. On the way to the gate leading to the train platform, Amar walked ahead, followed by his cousin and sister. The Ranj followed the two girls, and Benoy brought up the rear. Suddenly, as they were passing through the crowd at the gate, Amar uttered an exclamation of pain 'What is it?" said his aunt, "What Somebody pricked me on the arm," he replied, rubbing his right For a moment they all stopped. "Who did it?" asked the Ranj.

"A little dark man. He brushed against me. Benoy now became impatient, He suggested that they get on the train and there examine Amar's arm. They boarded the train and found their compartment. There Amar rolled up his shirt sleeve, exhibiting a dark red mark about the size of a small coin. Apparently he had bee pricked with a needle or large pin. On his shirt sleeve there was tiny yellowish stain. "Amar," said his aunt. "Can you remember what the man looked like?

The Ranj suggested that Amar leave the train and see a doctor at once, but Benoy ridiculed the idea. "You're making a mountain out of a mole hill," he said. "Amar has a lot to attend to in Pakaur." (He referred to homework in connection with his brother's studies at the uni-

The next day Amar seemed in the est of health, but on the next, the 28th, he complained of a swelling on his aunt sent him back to Calcutta with an uncle. The youth went to bed. Two doctors were called in.

These physicians—Drs. L. M. Ban-erjee and B. C. Roy, both leading medical men—agreed that the case was puzzling but not alarming. However, the next day the patient felt worse, and his arm looked more inflamed.

On the 30th the doctors called in Dr. Sivapada Battacharrya (no relation of Benoy's friend), officiating professor at the Calcutta School of moned Dr. Santosh K. Gupta, re-"I want you to take a blood samele, and see what you find," said Dr. Battacharrya. Dr. Gupta took the sample and went back to his laboratory.

He was still trying to solve the mystery of Amar's strange malady when the patient died. That was on December 4, and the next day Dr. Gupta, tensely peering into his micro-scope, discovered the presence of bubonic plague germs in Amar's charya had smuggled germs out of the Haffkine Institute during his visit. But who had been the dark-skinned man - he who had brushed against Amar and left death in his wake? A comparatively minor character in the drama, this furtive hireling never was identified. However, there was testimony linking him definitely with Benoy. Tulsi Charon Bose, a cousin of the Ranj, told the police that on the day before the crime he had entered the refreshment hall at the railroad station and seen Benoy in conversation with a short, shabbily dressed man of low origin. And Benoy's own chauffeur declared that on another occasion he had seen his master with this same stranger. They were talk-ing together, he said, before the Purna theater in Calcutta.

SUSPECT SEIZED ATTEMPTING FLIGHT

The secret investigation continued through January and into February.

The police hoped that Benoy would make some false move, so that they might seize his unidentified employe. But then something happened which forced their hand.

On February 16, 1934, the Ranj's attorney, Kalidas Gupta, boarded the train at Calcutta, intending to visit Bombay for further investigations of his own in connection with the case. He arrived in his compartment about 20 minutes before train time-and beheld, in a near-by compartment, the chief suspect—Benoyendra Nath

The lawyer immediately leaped to the conclusion that Benoy had smelled a rat and had decided to skip. Therefore, Gupta quietly informed the police.

The train stopped at Asansol, about 150 miles northwest of Calcutta, and Benoy was placed under arrest. That same day Dr. Battacharya was also

A DIARY OF THE FRENCH REVO-LUTION, 1789-1793. By Gouverneur Morris, Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston. 2 vols., 618, 652 pp. Illust. $9. Edited by Beatrix Cary Davenport.

In 1888 "The Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris," edited by Anne Cary Morris, were published in two volumes, omitting certain entires the diary which might have shocked readers of that period. Apparently it has been decided that the present trend in literature will admit their publication, as the present work is advertised as "unexpurgated," and presumably it is, though we read that certain passages were found inked out, and a few pages torn from the

The title is somewhat misleading; if one is not fairly well informed concerning the French Revolution, the diary entries concerning it would be decidedly vague. In like manner are the entries regarding the business transactions of Morris; it would re-quire the cleverness of "a Philadelphia lawyer" and trained accountant to follow them.

The short biographical sketch of outstanding patriot of the American Revolutionary period, wealthy aristocrat, friend of Washington, at least the amanuensis of the Constitution of the United Sates, clever lawyer and shrewd businessman, is sufficient to introduce the individual who wrote the diary, he having gone to France after the American government was established to sell land to Frenchmen, dicker with the French government in supplying wheat, flour, tobacco and other commodities, speculate in the French debt, and finally to succeed Jefferson as American ambassador to the French court.

The editor of this edition, who is a descendant of Morris, frankly says "Nothing must be expected from Morris' diary but a lively picture of

Morris was just short of 40 when he went to Paris. He was strong, well, and quite handsome, and wore a peg leg, having suffered an amputation just below the knee as the result of being thrown from his carriage in a runaway accident. However, the peg leg did not hinder his social success. In a short time he was on intimate visiting terms with princes, princesses, dukes, duchesses, counts and countesses. In fact there were few plain people on his list of social and official acquaintances, and in due time he fell into their ways and customs. He indited many "memoirs" to King Louis XVI and Queen Marie Antoinette, though he did not meet and converse with them until after he was appointed ambas-

The charming countess was 27 when Morris became infatuated with her and proceeded to cut in on the intimacy that existed between her and the club-foot Talleyrand, at that time Bishop of Autun, and after the reign of terror raised to the rank of prince by Bo parte. The countess already had a child of which the bishop was the father, but which had been recognized by her husband, who complain ed bitterly of her coldness to him The lady frequently implored Morris to wed her, saying she would divorce the count for that end, but Morris, who was never sure that she had broken her intimacy with the bishop, declined the "honor" of becoming her husband. Among other fashionable salons frequented by Morris was that of the brilliant and beautiful Madame de Stael. Daughter of Neckar, minister of finance, she had married Baron de Stael-Holstein, the Swedish ambassador, who abandoned her on account of her open acceptance of Count de Narbonne as her lover. This dashing young nobleman was said to be the incestuous son of Louis XV and his eldest daughter Adelaide. The clever baroness and Morris frequently clashed in verbal repartee regard-ing French politics; but for this there is an intimation they might have been more intimate friends. The really worthwhile part of these two volumes is the letters of Morris to President Washington, Secretary of State Jefferson, Robert Morris and many others, as they give an interest-ing insight on what was occurring in France during that period. Although an ardent Republican and one of the framers of the American Constitution, Morris viewed France as not ready for a real democracy, and he worked ardently to have the repub-lican leaders of France adopt a constitution that would admit of a king instead of a president. After abortive effort of Count Fresen, Marie Antoinette's lover, to effect the escape of the King, Queen and their children, Morris and some others collaborated in another escape plan which came to naught because of the King's indecision. The attitude of Morris toward the royal couple made him unpopular with the republican regime, so he brought his diary to an end and left the country.

Somewhat Gaudy. FIESTA IN MANHATTAN. By Charles Kaufman. Wm. Morrow & Co., New York. 313 pp. $2.50.

A promising first novel, dealing with the Mexican colony of New York. To an intimate knowledge of Mexico and Mexicans the author joins a flair for creating exotic, perhaps not memorable characters. It is not a novel of light and sunshine. The Garcias, man and wife, come to New York persuaded by a harridan authoress in search of "atmosphere" that they can earn a living singing and playing the guitar. Alas, senores, it is not so easy as all that—the Biggest Small Town in the world reserves its enthusiasm for less idyllic characters. The Garcias are introduced, in the pleasant Gringo sport known as "racket," finally to murder. All of which are quite unknown in the rillage of San Andres, and end by leaving both the Garcias completely disillusioned and one of them com-pletely dead. There is a perceptible overloading of characters, an scene of operations becomes at the end somewhat too gaudy for the interests of realism, but nonetheless it is a good effort. The author will be heard from again.

Dusany in Rhyme. MIRAGE WATER. By Lord Dun-sany. Dorrance & Co., Philadelphia. 78 pp. $1.75.

Lord Dunsany is best known and loved for his prose stories of phan-tasy and poetic imagination. Turn about is fair play, and now he presents a volume of poems more or less prosaic in inspiration, poems which will neither add to nor subtract from his status as a first-rate purveyor of day-dreams. If anyone but Lord Dunsany had written the 70 poems included in "Mirage Water," praise would be generous, for they are euphonious to the ear, they are writ-ten in commendable simplicity of style, and their subjects are interest-ing in variety. However, the fact remains that Lord Dunsany wrote them, and it is impossible not to compare them with his more imaginative and more lyrical prose stories by which he will be remembered. As a whole, his poems suffer by the com-

Soup's On! SOUPS, SAUCES AND GRAVIES. By Cora, Rose and Bob Brown. J.
B. Lippingott Co. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia, 319 pp. $1.75.

If you like food seasoned with philosophy, you'll want this new cook-book of the Browns. The three of them—mother, son and daughter-inlaw—have gathered recipes in the course of their travels all over the globe. They truly raise cooking to the standard of a fine art, as indeed it is in some places. In France, say the Browns, it is estimated that more than 10,000 fine soups originated in Parisian kitchens alone. So why no personalize your potages? Even if they come out of cans! And the Browns proceed to give recipes not only for soups that start from scratch but for those that may be transformed out of tins. There is another section on sauces and gravies, and we are willing to bet it's one of the most thorough sauce and gravy coverages of all time. This collection of over 500 recipes would serve as a splendid supplement to any culinary library, be it amateur or professional.

Delifhtful Romance. FRISETTE AND FRAZIL, by May de Witt Hopkins. Dorrance & Co. Philadelphia, 401 pp. $2.50.

An air of glamour and much mysticism still endures concerning the harems of Turkey during the old regime before Kemal Ataturk modernized life in that near-eastern section, emancipating women from the seclusion that had enveloped them under the edicts and rules of Mohammedanism. "Fisette and Frazill" is a delightful romance of that period, and it is written by a lady who has lived in Turkey and familiarized herself with harem (home) life, and the manner with which such establishments were maintained in the Pert and Saucy. CO-ED SINGS, and GIRL ABOUT TOWN. Two books of poems by Elizabeth Fowler Draper. Mathis, Van Nort Co., Dallas.

Each, $1.50. These two books of snappy verse by the same author might have been placed in one volume, for they are quite similar; however, they were not. Maybe some one can distinguish be-tween the Co-Ed and the Girl About Town; anyway it does not matter—they are both quite sophisticated, as girls about town and co-eds of the present day are supposed to be. F'rinstance the Co-Ed sings:

"Go! Leave me now, my day is full; This parting brings no sorrow. But, oh, my dear, I may not have A thing to do tomorrow." So much for the Co-Ed, but there are many more like that one. Now, as to the Girl About Town we read

3-in-One Western. SKYLINE RIDERS. By Francis W. Hilton, H. C. Kinsey & Co., New York. 266 pp. $2.

Action is the word that describes this fast-moving story, a two-gun western with all the thrills of fast riding and fast shooting. The book gets its name from the Skyline Riders, a bunch of men, who would sud-denly appear on the skyline in a most mystifying manner just before a drove of horses were stolen.

Association to round up the Skyline detective had not been in Badger to be the most outstanding person in those parts, for he had out-shot and out-ridden the best. This caused jealousy and it was not long before Steve was the hunted instead of the hunter, for he was accused of murder and kidnapping. The way this young detective turns the tables on the Skyline Riders is a clever piece of detective work. Francis W. Hilton, the author of "Skyline Riders," learned to ride be-fore he learned the three R's. His father was a rancher in northern Wyoming. Most of his childhood was spent on the frontier where he learned first hand the information used in his writing.

This is three stories in one—a western story—a love story and a de-tective story—neatly woven together to make one book

Homemaking Is Career in Itself," Says Sociologist

By NELL WALTHALL SIMMONS.

"Tea at four-thirty. In honor of Mrs. So-and-So, who has achieved an enviable success in her career as home-maker."

Just one invitation worded like that would mean that ambitions of some of the teachers who attended the annual convention of the Southern Sociological Society held here recently, had come a long way toward realization.

They are the teachers who give college courses in "Marriage" and "The Family." They say that women who are successful homemakers don't get the public acclaim they deserve—that it is a topsyturvy world where the important jobs that make the wheels go 'round are not recognized as such.

"A successful novelist will come to town," one of them pointed out, "or an actress who has worked up front page news value, and other women outdo each other to give parties in her honor. They admire her and exclaim over her glamor, her artistry, her real contribution to the world.

"As a matter of fact," he went on, "she may have had quite a time of it with her first husband and be on none too firm ground with her second. Her children may be off in boarding schools and her whole family life may be running around in

"And yet she gets the prestige—that is as measured by articles in the press and other public recognition. Success in making a home is not socially

The blame for this state of affairs was placed by Dr. Coyle E. Moore, who was in Atlanta for the convention from Tallahassee, where he teaches one of the most popular courses given at the Florida State College for Women. It is the one called "Mar-

"Professional women themselves are responsible for creating the fiction that superior women are not found keeping house," said Dr. Moore,

His course at Tallahassee is so popular that 40 per cent of last year's graduating class studied it. Asked if he thought the girls chose that "career" as being easier than getting a job in business or learning a profession, Dr. Moore would only say that "Marriage and making a home is a career itself, that requires training."

Dr. H. C. Brearley is teaching 70 men about "The Family." He is head of the department of Social Sciences at Clemson College in South Carolina, and his course by that name was so in demand that enrollment had to be limited.

Although he teaches the masculine half of future families, he knows how women feel about it all, too, and he tells his men students such important things as what he entitles:

Five reasons why housework is distasteful to ambitious women:

1. It is solitary. It has none of what has been called "The joys of gregarious employment." 2. It is monotonous, because it seems to have again the next day, and the next. 3. Success is not recognized, even at home. Most husbands are not good judges of housekeeping.

A successful homemaker has to be more versatile than a three-ring circus. She must be a nurse, a home decorator, a home economist, a phychologist, a purchasing agent, a prize budgeter, a recreational leader and a sociologist, according to Ruth Lockman, supervisor of community activities, FSA.

en who prepare t'- same sort of food over and over, and decorate their rooms the same year after year, are not apt to be successful wives," he thinks. From Emory, Dr. Comer M. Woodward, sociology department head, said one of the biggest reasons for the importance of the job of housewife is that she feeds the family. "There are more people going to the devil from eating poorly cooked food than for any other reason. Ignorance is reflected in the diet-its quality and its preparation," he maintained.

Dr. Woodward thinks it's up to women who run homes to do their jobs so well that they will become more important. "One of the first things she could do is learn more about food," he said without hesitation.

Dr. Lee Mr. Brooks, associated with Dr. Ernest R. Groves as professor of sociology at Chapel Hill, will soon have a book published. Written in collaboration with his wife, it concerns adventures in adoption of children.

"Those who bring up children to an awareness of the rights of others make the finest contribution to the world," he said.

"People who do the spectacular things seem to get an undue proportion of acclaim. The versatility of the homemaker doing her job well is something the headlines do not notice, but the community in its quiet analytical moments will rec-

"There are many women who go about their daily tasks quietly, sincerely and happily. They see beyond the mere obscurity that clouds their Agreeing with Dr. Woodward, under whom she studied at Emory, about that matter of food is Miss Ruth Lockman, supervisor of community activities at the Farm Security Administration project at Bishopsville, S. C. During the first week in May the FSA nationally puts its emphasis on diet. In close relation to that will be study of oral hygiene, because of direct relationship between the diet and sound teeth.

About the versatility of the homemaker doing her job, Miss Lockman agrees with Dr. Brooks.

As she says: "Nobody has as big a job as the homemaker. She has to be more versatile than a three-ring circus.

"She must be a nurse, a home decorator, a home economist (this includes sewing knowledge), a psychologist to understand her husband and train her children, a purchasing agent, a prize budgeter, a recreational leader, a sociologist."

"Women who work," generously concludes this young woman who works, "may specialize in one or more of these. The homemaker ought to be good

Three birds that are beginning to nest now: The hooded warbler, the phoebe, the blue-gray gnatcatcher,

Afield With a Naturalist

By GEORGE A. DORSEY.

BIRDS OF THE SEASON

One of the most strikingly beautiful birds to be found in the Atlanta region is the hooded warbler. My earliest date for its return in the spring is March 30. It inhabits cool, moist, shady places in the woods. Almost any patch of woodland with thick growth and fairly dense shade along a stream will have at least one pair of these birds in the summer. The song is rather loud for so small a bird.

It has two types of song patterns. One of them I have written, "pee-cher, wee-cher, wee-chee-ip!" The other, "hur, ker-cher, ker-wit-see, wee-you!" Both are accented on the next to last syllable.

The nest is a pretty little structure, built rather low in thick bushes. It is round and compact, and lined with fine fibers and rootlets. The foundation is of coarser material. It is often attached to the bush in which it is built with cob-webs.

The hooded warbler is rather active, as are most of the warbler tribe. Its food consists of various kinds of insects found in or near its haunts, some of which it catches on the wing. It is one of the commonest of our wood warblers, and is easy to see since it usually stays near the ground in the undergrowth, or in the lower limbs of the trees.

It is a rather shy bird, but if you sit quietly for a while it will often come quite close to you, showing off its bright yellow breast and eye-patch, and its immaculate, black hood-marking. It often spreads its tail, showing the white tips to the inner vanes of the outer tail feathers. The female lacks most of the black hood, having only half a hood on the crown. She is almost as bright yellow as her mate. One of the prettiest things I have ever seen was a bright male hooded warbler flitting around in a dogwood tree in full bloom.

The phoebe belongs to the flycatcher family, and is the only member of that group that is found with us during the winter. We have it as a nesting bird also, but our summer phoebes are most probably birds that wintered farther south, and the individuals that are with us during the winter probably go north to breed. It is really a bird of the northern zones, and is more common about At-lanta in winter than in summer. I imagine that the Atlanta region is about as far south as the bird will be found to build its nest.

It is a rather plain-looking, gray bird that sits upright and wags its tail backwards and forwards. It has the large head and general appearance that bird I know of that says "chip!" quite plainly, which is its common call note. Its song is a repetition of its name, "phoebe!" or "fee-bi!" with a rustic, masculine quality in its voice. The sites it most commonly chooses for its nest is characteristic of all flycatchers. It is the only are: on shelves under bridges, in the rafters under buildings in the country, under overhanging banks, and under jutting ledges of rock or cliffs, where there is quiet and cool shade. The nest is pleasingly shaped and well-made, cemented together with mud, and covered with mosses on the outside. It contains four to six white eggs. The phoebe begins nesting fairly early and often raises a second

Its chief food the year round is insects, most of which it catches on the wing. In winter it supplements this diet with many kinds of small wild fruits. I have never known it to do any harm. It is a valuable bird and should be encouraged when-

Among the earlier migrants to return to us in the spring is the little blue-gray gnatcatcher. My earliest date for its arrival is March 25, but one of our observers in the Atlanta Bird Club has seen one as early as March 14. My latest date in the fall is November 30, 1935, when I saw one in my city back yard—a rather abnormal occurrence, since the bird usually leaves before that time and prefers to stay in the woods.

This little bird is very active, flitting about through the treetops, flirting its rather long tail this way and that, and uttering its peevish-sounding little cries of "tsing! tsing!"—sometimes adding a couple of short syllables: "tsing, twee-twee!" Its voice is not very loud, and is high pitched and rather nasal in quality. Its song is a really fine performance, varied and musical, but you have to strain your ears to hear it unless the bird is close.

The nest of the gnatcatcher is one of the most beautiful of bird structures. It looks as though it were a large humming-bird's nest, built up into very pretty little cup, and covered with lichens and cobwebs on the outside. It is usually lined with a soft, cottony substance, and fine plant fibers, and is of a somewhat soft, elastic texture throughout, yet quite firmly molded together.

I find gnatcatcher nests most often in deciduous trees, usually saddled on a limb at a forked place, rather far out from the tree trunk. I have seen both the male and the female work at building the nest. This year (1939) I found one under proces of construction on April 2. I have no dates of when the eggs are first laid, due to the inaccessible locations the birds usually choose for their nests.

Rough riding? Whew! A monster engine such ed to run long, fast limiteds, is worse than being aback a donkey sightseeing down the slopes of the Grand Canyon. And more scary. Hitting up around 65 miles an hour, when the transport hits a curve and the outlay is to your other side, you see nothing in front of you. No tracks—but the front of the engine and a forest or a plain which, as you are rocking and rolling and holding on you have the utmost confidence you not only are going into but will turn over as well—but you don't.

The greenhorn was a resident of the cab, returning as far as Dalton. Then he decided he would focus his railroad investigation into other depart-

He has served thousands of people, including celebrities in every profession: Jack Dempsey, Nelson Eddy, Kermit Roosevelt, President Franklin Roosevelt, Gloria Swanson and others.
"Strange thing," Mr. McConnell confides.

"Celebrites pay no attention to table manners. Evidently their concentration is the job at hand. Why I have even seen them come in here with a blank stare, gaze meditatingly out the window and then eat their eggs with a spoon.

"Funniest incident in my career? Well, less than a week ago. During the busiest part of the lunch hour in walks a gentleman clad in overalls, not drinking, but obviously at peace with the world, gnawing on an apple. With insouciance he strolled over to one of my tables, picked up a salt cellar, sprinkled its contents on his fruit and when I came up—in uniform, to be sure—he asked 'Say, Buddy, are you foreman of this here gang?'"

Next was an inspection of the kitchen. "And, it is amazing how we railroad folks do Mr. McConnell said. The complete record of baggage enables a road to trace fully any missing or misplaced baggage.

It was over historic ground that the greenhorn rode to obtain information for this yarn. Every inch of it was fought over, was dedicated and consecrated by the soldiers of the War Between the States and immortalized by Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind."

Recorded Rhythms

By DUNCAN MacDOUGALD JR.

Don't miss Cootie Williams' "Boudoir Benny"sparkling, rollicking swing with graceful growling by Coot on the trumpet, and some solid backing by Greer on vellum. However, Sonny should spare us those corny breaks. Hodges in "Ain't the Gravy Good" is, of course, scintillating, and harken to the tone he lends to the reeds. Gene Krupa's "Some Like It Hot" reveals choice clarineting, and too loud drumming by Eugene. There's smooth tenor playing in "The Lady's in Love With You" but the band still lacks of relaxation and flexibility.

I am constantly amazed by the tempi set by Al Donahue's respectable band. Take "That Sly Old Gentleman" for example; the tempo here almost alters the tune! And "East Side of Heaven" would be better lento. Ginny Sims is too ambitious in "Don't Worry 'Bout Me" and "What Goes Up;" simple renditions would, I feel, have much more appeal. Clarence Profit's "Tea for Two" represents a rather unusual treatment of that colong classic. a rather unusual treatment of that colong classic a rather unusual realment of that obtoing classic, it's deftly and subtly played in almost "concert" fashion, and his "Changes" likewise has its fascination. Parts of Phil Lang's "Listen to the Mocking Bird" are reasonably good, but there's too much pure jive, and anyhow, such novelties are but ephemeral doings.

"Blue Moonlight," as blown by Hal Kemp, is a graceful creation, with considerable atmosphere derived from the sub-tone clarinets. "Hoi Polloi" appears to be another "Stop, Look and Listen," and eives only a fair treatment, for Hal never really

Years before he died Sam Jones, the late evangelist of Cartersville, purchased a lot in the tery overlooking the site of the railroad which

"And I desire to be buried there," he declared, "because while at rest, I want to hear the spinethrilling roar of the train as it passes, the whistle grooves it on such pieces. But he's plenty smooth on "Don't Worry Bout Me"—incidentally a tune that's gonna be a monster hit.

The Kemp reeds star in "What Goes up," intricately executed, and in "I Never Knew Heaven Could Speak," wherein they're definitely smooth. Dorsey's "Blue Moon" highlights more grand Mince clarineting, and I suppose many will think the "Marie"-like vocal a killer. Mince sparkles again in "Panama," and it still flabbergasts me why this steller performer on the long black thing receives so little recognition. And why is Tommy Dorsey's swing always so genteel? He rarely ever cuts lo with any unfettered, soulful and inspired righteous Charlie Barnett shows more guts and attack in

"Swing Street Strut"—a torrid swingeroo featuring mightly solid and rocking drumming by Wes Dean, and of course Charley fairly fulminates on sax. "Jump Session" is also in the savage vein, and the Maestro is thrilling once more. Huge Fats Waller's "Undecided" is slow and dignified—quite a contrast to the jolly "Step Up and Shake My Hand," and don't miss Al Casey's fine guitar accompaniment. Casey likewise gets off a mess of guitar in "You Asked for It."

Dick Robertson, who consistently beats out a brand of refreshing and inspired jam, does it again in "I'm a Lucky Devil" and "I'm Building a Sailboat"—two carefree, spontaneous examples of spirituoso collective improvisation. This music is created, not just drably played, and herein lies its worth and its unquestioned superiority over the uninspired, monotonous, mechanical and unfeeling music of the Lombardos, the Kayes and the Garbers. In the same vein, Jimmy Dorsey's "Arkansas Traveler" features a sax section that almost sings and sparkling brass deftly knit by McKinley's expert hide-pounding. On the sweet side Dorsey scores again in the mellow and smoothly blended

"You're So Desirable."

Of Bing Crosby's "That Sly Old Gentleman,"
"Hang Your Heart," Sing a Song of Sunbeams" and "East Side of Heaven" the first is hearworthiest, and Dr. Crosby fairly achieves croon-perfection in his rendition of this charming Morphean chanson. Brother Bob does OK too in "Song of the Wanderer," that has gay trumpeting by Butterfield, and "Stomp Off and Let's Go" with a sparkling Miller tenor chorus, trickily backed by Beauduc on the Ted Weems' "Under the Chestnut Tree," "Ghost of Piccolo Pete," "Ay-De-Day" and "Class Will Tell" are acceptable, but no great art. The band sounds rather harsh, indeed as though Jan Sibelius scored the brass! In Skeets Tolbert's "Get Up" and "Skin 'Em Back"—a couple of relaxed instrumental jazz seances, you'll find quite a few deft soli, and in John Kirby's "Rehearsin'," be sure to catch the sparkling clarinet and agile alto, to say nothing of the hep pianism, and of course John's magistral bull fiddlery.

Finally, why doesn't some enterprising musician make a so-called "dance transcription" of Ravel's exquisite "Pavane?" And incidentally it is an old southern custom to have college dances on Good Friday? Quaint things these collegians now

Ry MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, April 15.—(A)—
The star system, as it used to be, rarely exists on Broadway today. Stardom, in the backstage world, means that an actor or actress is important enough that their name will be featured above all advertising or otherwise exploitation of the play.

Take the Broadway playbill of today, and judge how the names are featured. Raymond Massey is starred in "Abe Lincoln of Illinois" but the facet that brought stardom there was that the play proved so sensational it brought star quality to the leading character.

Judith Anderson is starred in "Family Portrait" which is rightfully so because she has been starred in so many dramas in the star and she is doubly so in this picture of the Mother of Jesus.

In the "Hot Mikado," Bill Robinson is merely featured, but here is a performer who should be starred both now and in the dozens of musicals he has appeared in in the past years.

Nancy Carroll is starred in "I Must Love Someone," but the catch is that while Miss Carroll base been Jeeter Lester, none stars but now Garr is billed as that.

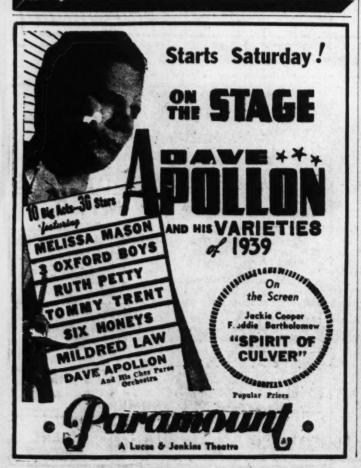

Stardom really is a nebulous quality on Broadway, and probably on any other theatrical street. It is odd the way actors and actresses want their names featured. For instance, George M. Cohan or Kaharine Cornell can display their names in the most insignificant type, with the exception that Miss Cornell does insist that her Katharine be spelled with an "a." but their names are selled with an "a." but

Paderewski

Ignace Jan Paderewski, the world's most renowned pianist, will be heard in recital at the Municipal auditorium Wednesday night, April 26, Atlanta being one of two cities in the South Atlantic states in which he will play.

Paderewski returns to the United States after an absence of six years. This is the twentieth American tour of the grand seigneur of music and former premier of Poland, whose long and colorful career both in music and politics has made him an almost legendary figure.

Olin Downes, critic of the New York Times, says: "The years go by and the name, the art, the personality of Ignace Jan Paderewski lose not one whit of their meaning for the public. Time has not affected his art or his pres-tige. A tremendous figure and a tremendous artist survive, and the multitude continue to do him homage. Paderewski imperator! There is only one of him."

Since resuming his concert tour in Detroit on March 15, Paderew-ski has been in good health and has filled every concert as ar-ranged. Wherever he has appeared he has drawn capacity audi-

Pull the Trigger on Constipation, and Pepsin-ize Acid Stomach Too

When constipation brings on acid indigestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with certain undigested food and your bowels don't move. Questions, Answers On Garden Subjects By MRS. FLETCHER PEARSON CROWN

This is such a busy time in the gardener's year, that I will not be held back by your questions, but will write of the things which I know by experience are important. We have had just enough of bloom and our gardens this spring to make us wish for a continuation. With planning and effort, we can have blossoms until early November.

I do not feel that this is too early to write about dahlias. I know that dahlia specialists wait until late May dahlia specialists wait until late May before planting, but I find in my own garden that I succeed very well by planting in April. When well planted and properly cared for, you may have dahlias to cut throughout the summer. If including them in your perennial border, we can place the miniature ones about two feet back from the front edge of the bed. back from the front edge of the bed. back from the front edge of the bed, and the tall ones just a few feet in front of the shrubbery. In either case, I advise a big hole, two feet square and about two feet deep, You must be sure of good drainage in the bottom of the hole, then fill in with 12 inches of good soil in which you have in-corporated one-half cup of Milorganite. Place two inches of top soil over this, and place the tuber. Before covering, place the stake, then cover two inches deep. As it grows, all more soil until the hole is filled, leaving a saucer-like depression around the plant. After the plant begins to grow and is six or eight inches high, we pinch out the top, causing it to branch. Then we feed with Agri-co, which gives the plant more potash and phosphate. I will write later the directions for summer care of dah-lias. You can still plant seed of dahlias, especially the small kinds, but do not depend entirely on seed. If you wish many lovely small cactus blossoms to cut, you should plant about three tubers of baby royal. Remember that a half-dozen plants, well cared for, will give you blos-soms and pleasure all summer, and tubers to plant next spring.

Quick Flowering Garden Of Annuals

Annual flowers have been so much improved each year they give perennials closer competition for garden prominence.

The old idea that annuals should never be grown in the perennial border, has long been discarded; and summer borders in which annuals predominate, are growing in favor.

In the early garden months perennials have no competition, since flowers can hardly be grown from seed to blossom in May and early June. But after delphiniums have gone the annuals take over, and can easily dominate the picture from then until winter comes

Especially valuable are annuals to the tenant or new home owner, who must make a new garden this spring, mer. Whatever effect he may desire in the border, by careful planning he may find annuals to create it. If abundant color and bloom are want-ed, the combination illustrated will achieve both.

The flowers listed in the illustration are among the easiest to grow and freest flowering. The plan sug-gested gives a pleasing informal arrangement in a backyard. A garden axis centers on the porch or terrace at the rear of the house, with a bird bath as a focal point at its terminus. The colors suggested may easily be changed to provide a different com-bination. All the flowers in this plan may be sown where they are to grow, after the ground is fairly warm, and they will grow rapidly to flower. One of the gayest flowers to be found in any garden, and one hardy enough for almost any climate, is the calliopsis. Formerly known as core-opsis, the true name for the perennial strain, it has recently been deand is known for its very wiry stem-med blooms, brilliantly colored in yellow and maroon and crimson. For table bouquets it is unsurpassed, and its beauty in the garden has been attested by many experts, and count-less thousands of amateur enthusiasts. European specialists have been particularly active in its development, and today there are many fine varieties with larger flowers and more compact growth than the older types. Garnet is one of these. With its rich veloped to new heights as an annual, solid red blooms, it makes a glowing patch of color in any garden.

It is these rich, red types that are most effective for garden decorative purposes, but they need the lighten-ing touch of the yellow trim to set them off properly. Most of the varie-ties have this trimming, differing in widths and intensity, with a ma-roon, scarlet and crimson center. A nice arrangement is to have the tall varieties in the center of a bed, with an edging. Calliopsis may be planted early or late, and because of their rapidity of growth, they are particularly suitable for the late planting when some other flower has failed. Soil conditions do not matter so much—they will grow anywhere—but they demand plenty of sun. Plant them where they are to grow, as transplanting is not always satisfactory, and when them out to 12 inches apart from the for the dwarfs. When midsummer comes, the blooms will form a solid mass, covering the foliage almost completely. Zinnias.

Tall, Large-Flowered Types. The dahlia-flowered zinnia comes first to mind under this heading. The plants bear many long stems of the showy, double, huge flowers, which closely resemble the show type of dahlia. This type is preferred for general garden use, producing a very brilliant mass of color, in bright, intense shades. Flowers are produced tense shades. Flowers are produced within about 60 days from the time of planting.

The California giant or mammoth The California giant or mammoth strain is, in some ways, a companion type to the dahlia-flowered. The plants are, however, taller than the dahlia-flowered type, with longer strong stems, which are particularly adapted for use as a cut flower. The flowers themselves are very large and well formed with a greathy and control of the contr and well-formed, with a smooth-to color combination of the flowers. Each petal is overlaid at the base with a deep golden yellow, while carrying out the individual flower color at the tip of the petal. This dual tone combination is equally effective under artificial light or daylight. Semi-Tall, Medium-Flowered Types. The fantasy type is the most recent introduction and the best known in the group. The flowers are composed of a mass of shaggy, ray-like petals, which gives a delicate gracepetals, which gives a delicate, grace-ful effect, quite distinct from the stiff formal zinnias to which we are ac-customed. The little haageana or Mexican hy-brid zinnia, is a small-flowered type with a charm all its own. This strain is composed of small double and semi-double flowers, most of them bicolor in effect, in combinations of golden orange and maroon, wine red and cream, golden yellow and red, mahogany red and orange, and some solid color flowers in shades of yellow, bronzy-red, orange and wine red. They are literally a mass of flower and make a colorful display. Especially adapted to bedding use, the stems are long enough to permit of their use in bouquets for small vases and bowls.

Spring and parties seem to go together. Most of you have some sort of entertaining on your minds for the coming weeks, and that's why Elizabeth MacRae Boykin's bulletin, "Set Yourself a Pretty Table," which may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Miss Boykin, in care of The Constitution, will be especially useful at this time of the year.

Give your rooms a spring "pick-up" with slip covers. They work wonders in any room, and now is the time for new ones. Send 15 cents to the Home Institute Department of The Constitution, for the booklet, "Making Slip Covers Successfully."
